U.N. Offensive Stalled By Fierce Red Blows; 2 Yank Units Hard Hit

U.S. Second, 25th Divisions Fall Back; Enemy Resistance Stiffens in East

TOKYO (Monday) Nov. 27 (AP). — The Communists hurled new bugle-heralded counterattacks early today at the stalled United Nations "end-the-war" offensive in northwest Korea. The Allies were shoved back in places.

The Communist counterblows, mounted in the chill moonlight, hit hardest at the United States Twenty-fifth and Second Division sectors.

There were no reports on the effectiveness of the new attacks. But the Americans in the center of the northwest front were hurled back as much as two and one-half miles by night assaults Sunday. And to the east, South Korean forces were forced to withdraw 6 to 11 miles.

Resistance Grows in Northeast

Heavy Red resistance also developed in northeast Korea.

A United States Seventh Division regiment ran into strong new opposition two miles south of the Manchurian border. The United States Fifth Marine Regiment got into close combat with Communists on the east side of the Changjin reservoir.

But the hardest blows were aimed at the United States Eighth Army offensive in the northwest.

Field dispatches indicated the halt in the Eighth Army's drive for a quick end to the fighting might be only temporary. An Eighth Army spokesman said Sunday the stiffening Red resistance had been expected. He indicated the Allied drive would continue.

Casualties in the reversals were not reported, but dispatches indicated they would not be small.

Yanks Fall Back Across River

The Reds hit the United States Twenty-fifth Division across its entire front at 2 a. m. Monday in what has become a typical night assault to the accompaniment of bugles. There was no word on the outcome of the Red strike.

The twenty-fifth's center sagged two and one-half miles Sunday under Red pressure. A battalion on the right had to pull back a mile and one-half at the same time.

On the right of the Twenty-fifth's Division, early morning attacks threw right flank elements of the United States Sec-

Officers Stop Talking

News of New Korea Offensive Censored by Field 'Screening'

By William J. Waugh

ON CHONGCHON RIVER LINE, Korea, Nov. 26 (AP)—Indirect censorship has settled like a fog over this heretofore freely reported war.

It is hard to say who ordered it, but any public information officer—the connecting link between the free press and the Army—will shrug and explain that the generals want tighter security.

The Army insists there is no censorship. There isn't so far as editing dispatches is concerned. The Army apparently is accomplishing the same result by withholding information at the operational command level.

The heat was greatest about two days ago. At one corps headquarters correspondents reported that for one day the press telephone was disconnected. Then for a short time their calls were monitored.

One PIO who asked that his name be withheld said:

"You can expect to find it that way all along the line from regimental commander on up the line to corps. They have been told to screen the news."

Corps commanders still are willing to talk to newsmen and will assure them there is no censorship but that they want withheld only matters involving security.

Most newsmen in the war theater conscientiously have made an effort to observe security, but under the new and unannounced setup tactical news is not always complete.

As an example, briefing officers reported one advance up to a town Friday night. Actually, troops had advanced through the town and moved several miles north of it. Operations and intelligence officers who formerly would fill in correspondents with the latest news now refuse to talk. Such concerted action all along the line could not have been spontaneous. It obviously was ordered.

Thus far there has been no effort to restrict movement of correspondents at the front. But one man at the front can give only the events of his particular unit. The correspondent at division headquarters must gather the news from the entire division front, and so on up to Army headquarters.

As the Army says, there is no direct censorship, but indirect censorship is here at the moment. It is accomplishing the same end—withholding part of the news until the Army wants it released.

Second Army To Probe Draft Rejections

Inquiry to Focus On 'Startling' Situation At Camp Holabird

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

Headquarters of the Second Army at Fort Meade, Md., has ordered investigation of a flareup of rejections of draftees who supposedly passed their induction tests 21 days before.

The inquiry will cover the Second Army's eight-state area — Washington, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, and Kentucky — with special attention being given to the "startling" situation at the Army induction station at Camp Holabird, Md.

At Camp Holabird, it was learned yesterday, between 20 and 25 percent of the draftees showing up daily for induction during November have been sent home as rejected, although all had been declared acceptable in the preinduction tests taken at the very same station three or four weeks before.

Ordinarily, the great bulk of draft rejections is made when the men, classified as 1-A by their draft boards, show up at an Army examination-induction station for their preinduction tests. Those found to be unfit for medical, moral or mental reasons are rejected and classified as 4-F. Those who pass the tests, unless given deferment, then get a minimum of 21 days to prepare for induction.

On showing up for induction, some of the draftees are reexamined and a few more are weeded out and rejected, usually for physical reasons.

The national rejection rate for draftees at preinduction examination has been running, according to latest figures, at 38 percent. The Nation-wide rejection rate at induction has been around 4 percent.

Socialists Win Early Lead in Bavarian Vote

Party in Munich Tops Christian Democrats 2-1 in Most Districts

MUNICH, Germany, Nov. 26 (AP).—The Socialist Party, which opposes West German rearmament, jumped off to an early lead in first scattered returns tonight from the Bavarian state election.

The first returns from the Sunday voting were too meager to show a decisive trend, but in this rock-ribbed conservative state ruled by the pro-rearmament Christian Democrats since the war, any strong Socialist showing would be considered significant.

Bavaria, largest German state in the American occupation zone, elected a new state parliament in a third crucial test of German sentiment toward rearming for defense of western Europe against communism. Early estimates said that about 70 percent of the six million eligible voters had cast their ballots, a heavy turnout.

[The United Press reported that results from 371 out of 430 districts in Munich gave the Socialists 138,426 votes; Chancellor Konrad Adenauer's Christian Democrats, 65,185; the Bavarian Party, 53,714; the Free Democrats (FDP), 32,005; Reconstruction Party, 19,997, and Communists, 15,211.]

Red-Occupied Burgenland Votes Down Communism

EISENSTADT, Austria (Monday), Nov. 27.—Voters of Burgenland Province in the Soviet zone of Austria rejected Communist candidates yesterday in the first free election of local governing officials in 18 years. Soviet occupation troops were present as Burgenlanders voted.

Only 3 percent voted Red.

Profits Tax Facing New Opposition

Johnson Favors Corporation Rate Hike; Democratic Split Is Possibility

NYHT News Service

Mounting opposition to the Administration's excess profits tax plan to raise four billion in new Federal revenues was evident yesterday as members of Congress beat their way back to Washington through storms and snowdrifts for today's opening of the "Lame Duck" session.

Although disrupted transportation schedules threatened to delay the arrival of some congressional leaders, the Senate and House will convene at noon for brief and routine meetings to open the bobtailed session of the expiring 81st Congress.

The excess profits tax legislation—for which Congress chiefly scheduled its unusual post-election session—also appeared to be running into heavy weather in both houses.

Senator Edwin C. Johnson (D., Colo.), who wields a key vote on the Senate Finance Committee, told reporters he favored a boost in corporation taxes in place of the excess profits levy proposed by President Truman.

Profits Tax Called Inflationary

He asserted that excess profits taxes were bound to be inflationary and to promote tax inequities and said he was not convinced they provided the best means of raising needed revenues.

A split in House Democratic ranks over the excess profits levy also loomed as a possibility as the Ways and Means Committee prepared to resume today its task of trying to write a tax bill.

Representative Daniel A. Reed (N. Y.), ranking Republican member of the committee, said he believed there was a "growing realization," among House Democrats, that the Administration's excess profits tax plan "won't work."

Reed is expected to touch off the first round of the tax battle in the House today when he introduces a resolution to instruct the Ways and Means Committee to investigate other methods of boosting Government revenues to meet the costs of the Korean war and defense program.

Truman Plans No Message

However, the Reed resolution will probably be sent to the Ways and Means Committee and pigeonholed there by the Democratic majority, which has thus far refused to consider any revenue-raising programs other than the excess profits tax.

President Truman will send no general message to the "Lame Duck" session, the White House revealed yesterday, but will make known his wishes at a conference with Democratic leaders this morning.

He will also submit later specific proposals for more than 10 billion dollars in new defense appropriations and substantial funds for aid to Yugoslavia and to step up atom bomb production.

Other top issues which will confront the "Lame Duck" session include the Truman-proposed 90-day extension of rent controls and Senate action to grant statehood to Hawaii and Alaska. Both appear to have only slim chances of approval.

Death Toll Mounts Past 200 As Eastern Cities Dig Out Following Record Blizzard

Damage Is Counted High in Millions; Weather Freak Saves Florida Citrus Crop

By The Associated Press

Violent wind and snowstorms which ravaged the eastern United States over the weekend relaxed yesterday, leaving in their wake at least 200 dead and uncounted property damage.

But in the Midwest the weather had not yet loosed its grip.

During its brief and savage course east of the Appalachians, the storm set a new record for ferocity. Observers termed it the worst of its kind in the northeast section's history.

The full count in human misery and in dollar loss had not yet been totaled. The storm continued to throw its ice and snow and freezing temperatures at many communities.

Several large cities were still paralyzed. Cleveland and Pittsburgh were among them.

Transportation Halted

Transportation in a number of centers was smothered in snow, and schools, offices, stores and factories did not expect to open today.

The furious weather hit the New York-Jersey coastline in hurricane force Saturday and ripped through the New England States — and Ohio and Pennsylvania—in an unprecedented display. A Government meteorologist said it was the most violent of its kind in the country's Northeastern quarter.

In Pennsylvania Gov. James H. Duff declared a state of emergency yesterday as the storm-battered State tried to dig itself out of one of the most severe storms in its history.

Death Toll By States

At least 20 persons were known dead in the all-out assault by the forces of nature, which brought a record snowfall to Pittsburgh and Cleveland, wind-swept torrents of rain to Philadelphia and other eastern Pennsylvania cities, and untold millions of dollars damage to every section of the State.

That onslaught was diminishing late yesterday. But emergency conditions still existed in many parts of the East and storm fingers had poked into the northern Midwest, and casualties and damage were growing in that section. Southeastern States, gripped by a sweeping freeze, also could blame the big North storm.

This was the State by State

Storm Delays Home-Bound D. C. Residents

Trains From West, South 3 to 4 Hours Late; Warmer Today

The holiday homecoming plans of thousands of Washingtonians and visitors were delayed yesterday because of storm-snarled transportation systems.

In the Washington are the only difficulties were a few icy spots on the roads—and the cold.

The Weather Bureau said the temperature here today would drop to 24 degrees before morning and would rise to near 40 degrees by afternoon. Yesterday's top was 31 degrees, at 4:05 p.m.

Light snow — just traces — fell last night. District sanding crews were at work last night on stretches of road that iced up in the evening.

The low of 17 degrees at 3:10 a. m. yesterday was two degrees short of the predicted 15, but it was cold enough to break the 47-year record for the date.

Continued subnormal weather is due here for two or three days more, at least, the Weather Bureau said.

Meanwhile, the problems of returning Washingtonians were many.

Transportation officials estimated that about 80,000 who left the city Wednesday and Thursday for

D. C. Youth Killed in Md. Crash

One youth was killed and six others were injured yesterday in the head-on collision of a truck and car while they were en route to a riding stable for a horseback outing.

The accident happened shortly before 9:30 a. m. at Georgia and Dennis aves., Md., when the truck skidded on ice.

Fatally injured when he was thrown out from the front seat of the light truck was Leonard S. Goldwater, 17, of 908 Quincy st. nw. He was pronounced dead of a fractured skull at Washington Sanitarium in Takoma Park.

The other six youths in the truck and one occupant of the car suffered minor injuries. Treated at Washington Sanitarium were: Jerry S. Kanthal, 12, of 711 Gallatin st. nw., fractured nose; his brother, Leonard M. Kanthal, 15, lacerations, and Mrs. Thelma Cunningham, 21, of 11819 Idlewood rd., Viers Mill Village, Md., possible broken ribs and back injury. Mrs. Cunningham was a passenger in the car, driven by her husband, James J. Cunningham, 24, who was not injured.

Treated at Suburban Hospital were Lee F. Zemil, 17, of 1238 Quincy st. nw., driver of the truck, leg injury; Donald Goldwater, 18, brother of the dead youth, abrasions and contusions; Julie Ann Carta, 17, of 913 Quincy st. nw., contusions to the face, and her brother, Edward Carta, 15, contusions to the forehead.

Police said the seven youths were on their way to the Cedar Riding Academy near Wheaton, Md. Zemil was driving north on

Freeze Follows Record Winds In New York

At Least 46 Dead Along Seacoast as Damage Is Surveyed

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (AP).—The Atlantic Seaboard tonight counted its dead in rapidly growing numbers following yesterday's savage gale. Property damage mounted by the millions of dollars.

At nightfall the loss of human life along the hard hit East Coast stood at 59—more than double last night's count—as more reports of the havoc poured in from isolated areas.

Freezing temperatures heaped misery on the storm sufferers.

Many thousands of families huddled in unheated homes, cut off from power and light by broken electric lines.

At least 100 hunters were in peril tonight around Saranac Lake, Lake Placid and Tupper Lake, in Upstate New York.

District Forester William Petty said they were trapped by tree-blocked roads and their plight would be "serious" if they were not freed before a heavy snowfall.

The storm was the worst of the Eastern Seaboard since 1938's tremendous hurricane.

Property damage was immense all the way from the Carolinas to Maine.

Chief Meteorologist Ernest Christie of the United States Weather Bureau in New York said: "The great land storm was the most violent of its kind ever recorded in the northeastern quarter of the United States," rivalling the 1938 blow in violence but not in duration.

The rain-laden winds—at times gusting at 108 miles an hour in the New York area—subsided suddenly last night.

Then temperatures dropped sharply, posing a health threat to thousands.

Emergency crews, at work everywhere, labored around the clock to restore power and tele-

Second Dividend On VA Insurance Due Next Spring

The Veterans Administration expects to begin issuing its next life insurance dividend in March or April, an official said today.

The amount will not compare in size with the $2,800,000,000 payment now being completed. VA has no estimates of it, but guesses of individuals range from 400 million dollars to one billion dollars.

The new payment will be for the years 1948 through the 1951 policy anniversary date, and thus will represent only three years instead of the accumulation of up to eight years in the first refund.

Payments on the first refund have averaged $175 each.

After next year's special issue, dividends will be paid annually—when there are any—in a routine fashion on the anniversary date of each policy.

VA said no applications will be necessary for the forthcoming dividends, in the case of veterans who have received the first one. Holders of lapsed policies would be wise to apply, however. The forthcoming payment will be for all policies kept in force at least three months—not necessarily three consecutive months—between the anniversary dates in 1948 and 1951.

A House Veterans' Subcommittee will start hearings Tuesday on a possible substitute for the National Service Life Insurance program. VA has described the current program as unwieldy.

1940 Brought Delicate Effort To Aid Britain and Avoid War

Installment Sixteen

F.D.R. to Francis B. Sayre in Manila.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Dec. 31, 1940

Dear Frank:

The expression which you give me in your letter of November 13 of your pleasure over my re-election and of your good wishes for the critical four years that lie ahead is naturally most gratifying.

We of course do not want to be drawn into a war with Japan—we do not want to be drawn into any war anywhere. There is, however, very close connection between the hostilities which have been going on for three and a half years in the Far East and those which have been going on for sixteen months in eastern Europe and the Mediterranean. For practical purposes there is going on a world conflict, in which there are aligned on one side Japan, Germany and Italy, and on the other side China, Great Britain and the United States. This country is not involved in any hostilities, but there is no doubt where we stand as regards the issues. Today, Japan and Germany and Italy are allies. Whatever any one of them gains or "wins" is a gain for their side and conversely, a loss for the other side, Great Britain is on the defensive not alone in and around the British Isles, and not alone in and around the Mediterranean, but wherever there is a British possession or a British ship—and that means all over the world.

You say that you have "the feeling that any day Japan may start moving southwards." As you point out, we are faced with the danger of Japan's continuing her expansion in the Far East, especially toward the south, while the European issue remains in the balance. If Japan, moving further southward, should gain possession of the region of the Netherlands East Indies and the Malay Peninsula, would not the chances of Germany defeating Great Britain be increased and the chances of England's winning be decreased thereby? I share your view that

Kann's First Suburban Store Now Being Built in Arlington

S. Kann Sons Co. last night announced plans for its first suburban store, a four-million-dollar project in Arlington to be opened by spring of 1952.

The store will be known as Kann's-Virginia. It will be located on a 500,000-square foot tract at Fairfax dr. and N. Washington blvd., extending from Kirkwood st. to N. Monroe st.

Kann's already has started work on the lower level of what will be a complete department store of approximately 120,000 square feet on three floors, including all of the merchandise and services now available at the downtown Washington store.

The location is a quarter mile west of the Clarendon shopping area. Plans call for Kann's-Virginia to be surrounded by complete small store facilities to be built on adjoining land by Mace Properties, Inc.

An announcement said the new building "will be modern in every respect with air-conditioning throughout, escalators and elevators; the lighting designed by Edward Ashley, the mechanical engineer for the entire store building, will be a combination of fluorescent and incandescent in order to obtain brilliance, softness and a close likeness to actual sunlight."

The exterior, planned by architects DeYoung, Moscowitz & Rosenberg, will be of brick, crab orchard stone, glass and natural wood "in an effort to harmonize the structure with the casual and leisurely beauty of the Virginia environs."

Because of the rolling topography of the land, Kann said, the store will contain entrances from

Body Thrown Over Billboard

Speeding Train Kills Boy Cycling Over Beltsville Tracks

A 12-year-old boy, bicycling home with cherry pie, was killed when an express train hurled him 18 feet over a billboard near his home at Beltsville, Md., yesterday.

The victim was Albert Furr, son of James Furr, a Beltsville barber. According to police, Albert was taking a short cut across the tracks to his home on the Old Baltimore Pike when the tragedy occurred, shortly after 2 p. m.

His bicycle was carried under the wheels of the passenger train for three quarters of a mile before Engineer William E. Carroll, 56, of White Marsh, Md., could stop the train.

Prince Georges County police said the train, the Baltimore & Ohio's Royal Blue, bound from Jersey City, N. J., to Washington, was traveling about 75 miles an hour as it came through Beltsville.

Carroll told them he saw the boy stop on the tracks and start to get off his bicycle when the train was less than 100 yards away. He said he applied brakes immediately but could not avoid hitting him.

It was several minutes before the boy's body was found behind the billboard. He was taken to Chambers funeral home in Riverdale, Md.

Friends of the youth, a student at Beltsville School, said many of the youngsters in Beltsville cross the tracks over planks at the station instead of using the nearby overpass. They said Albert, however, was one of the most cautious whenever he crossed there.

District-Bound Travel Delayed; 28° Today

Thanksgiving would try to make it back last night.

Union Station expected 70,000 to return in the evening. The terminal was crowded most of the night—not only with incoming passengers, but wtih departing visitors.

Some trains — notably to the south and New York—were forced to turn away passengers. Station officials said visitors to Washington over the Thanksgiving holiday apparently decided, because of the storm, to wait until the last minute to leave.

The Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio railroads were running three to four hours behind schedule on trains coming from the snow-bound west. From Altoona, Pa., to Washington, transportation was fairly reliable on the Pennsylvania. From Pittsburgh and beyond to Altoona the going was slow.

P. R. R. and B & O trains from New York to Washington were on time. Southern Railway System, Seaboard and Atlantic Coast Line trains from the South were three to four hours late.

Washingtonians visiting Atlantic City—some were delegates to an educational convention there—had a bus and train ride to take before making connections in Philadelphia. Because the 5 miles of marshland from Absecon, N. J., to Atlantic City is under water, Pennsylvania Railroad took passengers to and from Absecon by bus. From Absecon to Philadelphia, regular schedules were maintained.

The only important "annulment" in the Pennsylvania's schedule here yesterday was cancellation of the Liberty Limited section to Harrisburg. Passengers were carried to Harrisburg on another train because of lack of equipment, and this train connected with regular Liberty Limited equipment in Harrisburg westward to Chicago.

Bus companies in Washington reported that transportation north, south and east was moving, but that trips west were canceled.

Air travel depended yesterday on what airports were open. Washington National Airport had never been closed since the storm hit here Saturday afternoon.

The greatest problems were for the motorist.

The American Automobile Association, which received 1000 calls for trouble Saturday, marked down 800 yesterday. AAA yesterday received an additional 2000 calls for information about conditions.

An official of the association said between 8000 and 10,000 Washingtonians were trying to drive home last night.

Roads in the District, and Arlington, Fairfax, Montgomery and Prince Georges counties were reported generally cleared of ice last night.

State police in Maryland warned that roads north of Frederick were beginnin- to ice up again last night.

The AAA warned that all roads were blocked in Kentucky, Ohio, West Virginia and western Pennsylvania. Highways were reported icy near Charlottesville, Va.

District and area roads, before the sanding crews started their operations, were the scene of hundreds of minor accidents Saturday night and early yesterday.

But only one local traffic death has been attributed so far to road conditions—that of 17-year-old Leonard S. Goldwater, of 908 Quincy st. nw., student at Chamberlain High School. He was killed and seven others were injured yesterday when a truck skidded into a car here.

Three pedestrians were injured in falls because of icy conditions.

Nellie C. White, 56, of 900 19th st. nw., slipped while crossing Pennsylvania ave. at 21st st. nw., Saturday night, and was taken to George Washington University Hospital with a fractured right leg.

Alfred L. Pearson, 21, of 1433 Taylor st. nw., slipped while working at a gas station at 7801 Georgia ave. nw., at 7:45 a. m. yesterday. He was taken to Emergency Hospital with a possible fracture of the right knee

Mell O. Moss, 45, of 417 Delafield pl. nw., slipped on the front porch steps of his home about 8:15 p. m. Saturday and was taken to Emergency Hospital with a possible fracture of the right shoulder.

Maryland yesterday was faced with high water at one end of the State, piled-up snow at the other.

Deal Island was still under water as the high tides that swamped Chesapeake Bay receded somewhat. One fatality due to the storm was the drowning of Walter Shafer, 38-year-old Washington County farmer, in a stream that overflowed its banks.

Ferry traffic between Sandy Point and Matapeake was back to normal yesterday. It was halted at 6 p. m. Saturday because water overflowed the Kent Island Narrows bridge on Route 50, the direct approach to the eastern terminal of the ferry.

Power trouble hit Sharpsburg and Indian Springs yesterday in the western part of the State.

New snow, meantime, continued to fall in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Rescue Squads Called

The Kensington, Silver Spring and Takoma Park Rescue Squads were called to the scene. Montgomery County police at Silver Spring placed a technical charge of manslaughter against Zemil. He was released on $1000 bond for appearance at a hearing in Silver Spring police court.

A tenth grade commercial art student at the Chamberlain Vocational High School, Goldwater was the son of Abraham Goldwater, a retired District fireman. The father, who had gone out during the morning to visit some firemen friends, did not learn of the tragedy until afternoon, when he was located at Engine Co. 24 on Georgia ave. nw.

Besides his parents and his brother, Donald, who recently entered the Navy and was home on leave from Norfolk, Va. Leonard is survived by a sister, Miss Gloria Goldwater.

A young bicyclist received leg injuries yesterday when he skidded on the ice while riding on the sidewalk in the 100 block of Tennessee ave. ne. He is Boyd Roop, 12, of 147 13th st. ne., who was admitted to Casualty Hospital, where his condition is not serious.

Two persons were injured, neither seriously, in the head-on collision of a car and milk truck on Route 123 one mile south of McLean, Va., late Saturday night.

The driver of the car, Antonio Quesada, 45, of Ryan, Va., was admitted to Georgetown Hospital with scalp lacerations and possible fractured ribs. His wife, Mary Jane Quesada, 36, was admitted to the hospital with face lacerations and a possible fracture of the right cheek bone. Police said the truck was driven by Claude C. Lawson, 42, of Vienna, Va., who was not hurt.

Here's news about color (nothing to do with TV)

For the past few weeks the utterance of the word "color" has meant only one thing in all kinds of company, in all places. Despite this state of affairs, we have color news and it has nothing to do with TV . . . or even the beautiful colorings in our new Bethesda-Chevy Chase store. (Besides, they are a story in themselves).

Yes, we have color but it's in a shirt. A man's shirt. In fact, it's the shirt Washington took by storm just a few months ago.

All this suspense is for Van Heusen's Century . . . in color. The shirt with the patented soft collar that won't wrinkle . . . ever. The collar won't let perspiration wilt it or laundering hurt it.

We know this announcement doesn't carry the impact of TV in color. But the Century is an amazing shirt. The fact is it is available in blue, tan and grey with all the advantages it has in white merits special attention.

Why you might even buy one for your brother-in-law's Christmas present. It would cost you only $3.95.

two levels. The store building will touch Fairfax dr. with parking areas stretching from the building to N. Kirkwood st. and through to N. Washington blvd. and N. Monroe st. The Mace development will be on the northeast corner of Fairfax dr. and N. Monroe st.

Room for 1000 Cars

The store's lower level will be adjoined by a 400-car parking lot. The first floor will be adjoined by a 650-car lot, thus providing space for more than 1000 cars at any one time. The two parking lots, though on different levels, will be joined by a wide, gradual ramp and entrances will be on all four boundary streets.

Plans call for outdoor selling on the lower terrace of various playground equipment and outdoor furniture. Provision also had been made for expansion of the building at a future date to more than double its original capacity.

George A. Fuller Co. is the general contractor for the store and parking lot. Land negotiations were handled by Walter Tobriner, Thomas Phillips and Fred Kessler.

The announcement said that "by means of a unique system of landscaping and floodlighting, Kann's store will harmonize not only with its natural environment but also with the smaller correlated and competitive stores in the business center.

"The architecture of these stores, also designed by DeYoung, Moscowitz & Rosenberg, will be closely integrated to that of Kann's store and will have complete access to and use of the 1000-car parking lot. By the time of its completion date, this 16-acre business center is expected to contain, in addition to Kann's department store, other stores that will handle general merchandise, children's wear, jewelry, apparel, millinery, stationery, hardware, furniture, flowers, etc.

"In addition there will be supermarkets, bakeries, restaurant, repair facilities and possibly a State liquor store, a post office and a large service station."

Kann's said the entire project is designed to make one-stop shopping a reality by affording the maximum in variety, quality and convenience. After considerable study of the Greater Washington area, Kann's came to the conclusion that Virginia afforded outstanding opportunity for the success of a mammoth business center at this time because of the excellent site location, good roads and the growth and progressiveness of the area."

Kann's thus joins two other major Washington department stores which have opened suburban branches—Hecht's in Silver Spring, Md., and Woodward & Lothrop in Bethesda. Hecht's now is building a suburban store in Arlington, about seven blocks southwest of the new Kann's—Virginia.

nation rejection rate of draftees has been keeping pace with the national—and State—average, but its second weeding out of unacceptable draftees, at the point of induction, has jumped to four or five times the national average of 4 percent.

A Second Army official said yesterday that while Camp Holabird's induction rejection rate was "outstanding," a noticeable rise in induction rejections has been observed at other induction stations in the military area. He said an inquiry was being undertaken to analyze the reason for the spurt in rejections.

Some Selective Service officials believe that Camp Holabird induction officers are turning back on induction day the very men they administratively okayed for induction several weeks before even though these men had flunked the mental qualification tests. Such administrative okay is permissible under Army regulations to balk selectees suspected of deliberately flunking the mental tests.

John M. Clark Is Drowned in Canoe Mishap

(From Wire Dispatches)

CLAREMONT, N. H., Nov. 26, John McLane Clark, 40, publisher of the Claremont Daily Eagle and former member of The Washington Post staff, was believed drowned today when he and three of his five children were swept into flood waters of the Sugar River in a canoe.

The children—Linda, 12; Alexander, 10, and Winfield, 7—were rescued by firemen after neighbors saw them clinging to a tree branch in the swirling water. Searchers had found no trace of Mr. Clark.

Police said Mr. Clark was teaching his children how to paddle the canoe in a flooded football field behind his home. The craft was swept into the nearby river and upset.

Eyewitnesses said Linda held her younger brother and sister above water while she clung to the tree branch until help arrived.

Early in his newspaper career, Mr. Clark was a church and school editor, police reporter, rewrite man and later editorial writer for The Washington Post. He left after five years for a year's study at Harvard in the first class of Nieman Fellows in 1938.

Mr. Clark has been publisher of the Eagle since December, 1947, when he purchased the paper from Lincoln O'Brien.

In 1939 and 1940, he served as a press officer under the late John G. Winant when the latter was American representative at the International Labor Organization in Geneva, Switzerland.

He served in the Army from 1943 to 1945 and for the next two years was assistant to President John Sloane Dickey of Dartmouth College.

It has done millions of dollars in property damage. It has caused more than 100 deaths. It has virtually smothered traffic in Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Columbus and dozens of smaller cities. It has cut off electricity for more than 800,000 persons. It has suspended commerce and industry in some areas.

The American Red Cross said it has caused hardship for at least two million people in a large part of the Nation's most populous area. It has forced other millions of people to make changes in their normal activities.

The storm had its beginning Friday in development of a deep low pressure area—a large pocket where the air became less dense than usual—over the Carolinas. Air from regions of higher barometric pressure rushed toward and into this big semivacancy.

These swirling winds swept into a giant counterclockwise whirlpool as they merged, and the big spinning storm moved northward. Moisture-laden winds flying at hurricane speeds came in from the Atlantic Ocean. They crossed the coastline at New Jersey and New York with gusts up to 108 miles an hour, sweeping giant waves and massive tides with them.

Into the whirl were sucked warm air from the South and Southwest, and a potent reactor—vast quantities of near-zero cold air from the North and Midwest.

On the east side of the spinning storm, racing, rain-spilling winds smashed wires, trees, signs, weakened buildings and tens of thousands of windows Saturday. The piled-up tides drove miles across seaside flats to wreck small craft and undermine houses near the shore.

Farther West, as the rain met cold air, it froze and turned into sleet, burdening power lines, which snapped.

Frigid winds loosed heavy snow from piling clouds. The snowfall yesterday morning had ranged up to 32 inches at Morgantown, W. Va. At Pittsburgh, 25½ inches had fallen, and the Golden Triangle was choked, cutting off traffic completely. There were 19 inches at Cleveland.

Tens of thousands of automobiles were stalled in drifts.

Cleaveland andPittsburg hotels were stalled in drifts.

Cleveland and Pittsburgh hotels were jammed with snow-trapped people. In the Altoona, Pa., area, some 200,000 residents had no electricity. They used candles for light, and many whose homes were equipped with electrically-driven furnace blowers were without heat

Only three of Pittsburgh's trolley lines were still operative, as new snow lashed at the city, but they didn't go into the downtown area. Maternity emergency calls swamped police. In Cleveland, 200 to 300 National Guardsmen helped the police department patrol shops against possible looting. There were 20 minor burglary reports—more than usual, but not alarming.

Floods developed in eastern Pennsylvania as cold weather moved into that area.

Some 300 persons were evacuated from their homes at Lock Haven, where the Susquehanna's West Branch went 6.5 feet over flood stage and three feet of water flowed in the main street.

The State-Federal flood forecasting service predicted eight feet above flood stage at Williamsport by last night.

The cold was expected to hold off more rain in the affected area.

The Pitt-Penn State football game, set for today after it was snowed out Saturday, was postponed again yesterday—until next Saturday.

Trains ran up to five hours late through the snow area, but few were cancelled. However, plane service was shut off to many points. Bus routes in Ohio and western Pennsylvania were blocked.

For a while, early yesterday, the storm took a maverick course, pushing southwest until its center was over Lake Erie north of Ohio. Normally, movement of storms in the region runs somewhere between north and southeast. Later, it began an eastward trend.

Early yesterday, it was shaking snow down as far west as Eastern Wisconsin and Illinois. All of Michigan, Indiana and Ohio were getting snow, with the exception, for a time, of Cleveland. It continued snowing in Northern Kentucky, Western West Virginia, Western Pennsylvania and Western New York State.

One of the storm's side effects was the drawing of a sharp cold wave into Dixie. Temperatures went as low as 17 degrees in Northern Florida, but high winds, dry air and smudge pots kept the multi-million dollar citrus crop from damage.

phone service to the still-stunned communities.

Dangling power lines snuffed out at least six lives and still constituted a major menace.

The gale smashed its way across Maine today.

No deaths were reported in that State but damage was heavy. Roads were covered with ice and at times gusts of wind reached 74 miles an hour.

Motorists were asked tonight to stay off dangerous highways unless their travel was absolutely necessary.

In New York 23 died. In New Jersey the death toll was 26.

Connecticut apparently was hardest hit in property damage of the New England States.

Several New England rivers were reported flooded and out of banks.

Freighter Goes Aground

The 4100-ton Norwegian freighter Lago went aground last night on Clark Island, off Portsmouth, N. H., but its crew was in no danger. Hundreds of boats were wrecked or damaged all along the coast.

Massachusetts' Department of Public Works said damage to State highways would exceed a quarter of a million dollars. Virtually all modes of transport were snarled or cut off entirely.

The Pennsylvania-Reading Seashore Line announced tonight it is halting all New York-to-Atlantic City rail service and sharply curtailing Philadelphia-to-Atlantic City operations.

A spokesman for the railroad said high water and washouts caused by the wind and rain forced the curtailment. Much of the track still is covered by water, with some sections washed out.

Saturday's storm uprooted trees, unroofed houses, and shattered plate glass windows by the thousands.

Scores of light dwellings were toppled.

Beach cottages were blown or washed into the ocean.

Rivers and bays in New York and New Jersey, fed by strong tides and rain, spilled out of their banks, flooding streets and basements in many communities. Four children in one family were drowned in a flooded home on the Jersey shorefront.

Newark and Jersey City, N. J., and Danbury, Conn., declared states of emergency yesterday. In Jersey City, the howling wind shredded copper plates from the dome of the City Hall. There, too, it tore the roof off a home for the blind.

La Guardia Field, closed down shortly before noon yesterday, began operating on a part-time basis this morning when one of the field's three landing strips was opened to traffic.

The two other strips lay under 1 to 2 feet of water, which swept in from Flushing Bay over the 12,000-foot-long dike guarding the outer rim of the field.

Extensive plane repairs faced the airlines. Landing gears of most of the planes parked on the field were damaged by sea water. The storm forced the cancellation 350 flights.

New York City's subway system, which suffered scattered suspensions of service, returned to normal today. Service on the Long Island Railroad, spotty when the blow knocked out signal systems and toppled trees on the tracks, also was restored.

The Hudson & Manhattan Railroad, major link between Manhattan and New Jersey, resumed operations between Jersey City and Newark early today after flooded tracks were cleared.

Power Being Restored

In New York City, the Consolidated Edison hoped to restore service by tonight to virtually all of the 407,000 consumers whose electricity was cut off by power failures. Another 400,000 homes were without electricity in New Jersey and 10,000 in Connecticut.

As the wind abated, the temperatures in the metroplitan area slid from the mid-50's yesterday to 27 degrees at 8 a. m. today. There were some snow flurries.

The Blue Hills Observatory in Milton, Mass., reported that at 9:30 last night the wind reached a sustained velocity of 67 miles an hour—the highest sustained speed since 1886. Gusts up to 94 miles an hour also were reported.

The storm poured out its full fury on the New Jersey area. At least 23 were reported dead there.

Resort City Damaged

At Atlantic City, booming breakers roared over the famous boardwalk. Damage in that resort city alone was estimated at half a million dollars.

Some 40,000 phones were out in the State, making it difficult to tally the widespread damage. Shore roads were clogged by wrecked houses, stalled cars and trucks and beached boats.

At Morgan Beach, south of South Amboy, N. J., only two out of 40 homes remained standing.

As the flood waters receded, thousands of persons, who sought shelter in disaster centers, began returning to their frigid homes.

Hundreds of homes on suburban Long Island and in nearby Westchester County were without heat or telephone service.

Colleges to Excuse Tardiness

By The Associated Press

College students anxious to get back to classes on time from snowbound communities can stop worrying.

Many schools postponed reopening after the Thanksgiving holiday. Others announced yesterday they would be kind to the young men and women made tardy by the weather.

Among those was Ohio State University in Columbus, which will resume classes today for its approximately 23,000 students. Officials announced that weather bound students would be excused and allowed to make up the lost time later.

Pittsburgh's three major universities—Pitt, Carnegie Tech and Duquesne—and Penn State decided not to reopen until Tuesday. Penn State's football team, unable to play a scheduled game with Pitt last Saturday, remained holed up in a Pittsburgh hotel.

In Ohio, Ohio University (at Athens), Denison, Kent State and Capital, postponed their reopening until Wednesday. Wooster College will reopen Wednesday. Western Reserve and Fenn at Cleveland and Youngstown College will be closed today.

Other Ohio colleges reopening today—with tolerance for late comers—are Miami at Oxford, Ohio Wesleyan at Delaware and Bowling Green.

Everything at Steak!

By Albert Parchey Mesirow

HERE it is December again. It's a funny thing, but I don't have to consult a calendar to know when winter has rolled around. I can tell by what people order for lunch and dinner. When the thermometer drops, the demand for our chopped tenderloin steak at lunch-time rises. At dinner, we get more and more calls for our filet mignon. There's good reason for this. Beef is protein in its most delicious and digestible form. Beef not only builds bone and muscle, beef generates energy, and hence promotes body warmth. When you rise from a satisfying meal of beef, you're ready to face the world and grapple with it. Your body is fortified against cold and fatigue; your spirit is calmed and relaxed. Beef is a good thing. Good for the body and good for the soul. We should be especially thankful that we, here in America, can and do eat more beef per capita than any nation on earth. I have often wondered how the turkey happened to become the symbol of our national Thanksgiving. For all his many virtues, the turkey has contributed very little to our country's vitality, energy and general well-being. The steer furnishes the most important and best-tasting food we eat!

Did I remind you that our New York Sirloin Steaks are the finest we have ever had the pleasure of serving? Big, thick, tender, juicy they are; cut from corn-fattened cattle and purchased especially for us by our own beef experts in Chicago and Kansas City. If you haven't tried one of these superlative pieces of beef lately, by all means do so soon. And for a change from the usual fresh-mushrooms-and-wine sauce, let me suggest that you ask for yours well garlicked and covered with melted butter. It's positively scrumptuous (and shamefully fattening)! Come to Parchey's, 19th at K sts. nw.

If anyone can tell me why it's called a "Scotch Mist," I'll be grateful. Lately, folks have started calling it "Scotch on the Rocks," for a not-quite-so-obscure reason. Anyhow, if you like Scotch, you'll enjoy the way our Mixologist, Luther Henighen, makes our Scotch Mists. Into an old-fashioned glass he puts a couple of cubes of crystal-pure ice. Over this he pours a generous jigger of Gilbey's Spey Royal Scotch whiskey, adds a skillfully twisted bit of lemon peel, gives it a quick stir and sends it on its way to you. Luther tells me that twisting a lemon peel is an art, too . . . like making an omelet. The idea is to squeeze the oil from the peel. If you pinch too hard, you're likely to get some of the bitter flavor of the rind itself. If you don't pinch hard enough, nothing happens. And the trick is to leave the peel fresh-looking and unbruised. You'll have to admit that Luther is a magician at extracting the oil from a peel. And the dour Scotsmen who make Gilbey's Spey Royal are magicians, too. Somehow, they seem to have trapped and liquefied the smoke of burning peet, blended it with the pure distillation of Scottish oats and sealed it into bottles with a bit of heather flavor. When you pour from a bottle of Gilbey's Spey Royal, you can practically hear the Scotch burrr! Our Scotch Mists, by the way, are only sixty-five cents. Stop by and have one on your way home tonight. They're delicious! Our address: 19th at K nw.

New Blackout Hits Montgomery Sectors

A blown fuse caused a partial blackout in the Wheaton and Norbeck areas in Montgomery County, Md., for approximately 2 hours yesterday afternoon.

In some places in the two areas, homes were entirely without electricity while in others the voltage was so low that light bulbs barely flickered.

Trouble shooters for the Potomac Electric Power Co., were sent out immediately after the trouble was first reported around 5 p. m. They located the blown fuse in a high tension feeder between the Bethesda substation and Norbeck, made repairs and the lights were back on again by 7:10 p. m., Pepco officials said.

A small crew of trouble shooters stood by at the substation at Georgetown rd. and Del Ray ave. in Bethesda throughout the day in case there were difficulties with the emergency equipment, setup Saturday after a blast ripped through the second floor of the building.

The explosion, which occurred at 5:28 a. m. Saturday, put all of Rockville, Gaithersburg and Norbeck and parts of Bethesda and Chevy Chase in darkness.

Cause of the explosion has not been determined, although it is believed a leakage of insulating oil from an automatic circuit breaker set up an oil vapor which was ignited by a spark of lightning.

The west section of Alexandria, Va., was blacked out and downtown streets were without traffic and street lights for approximately two hours shortly after 5:30 p.m. yesterday. A spokesman for the Virginia Electric & Power Co. said a cable failure at Commonwealth ave. and Mason st. caused the blackout.

Pen Barracks Burn; 300 Saved

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 26 (AP).—Fire in 20-degree weather razed a wooden Alabama State prison barracks today—but 300 convicts were saved.

Gov. James Folsom and his adjutant general, James S. Saliba, raced to the scene to direct the fast predawn rescue effort.

Law enforcement officers congregated in fear of a mass escape attempt, but not a single prisoner made a break.

The convicts were loaded into trucks and buses at the scene of the fire, State Prison Farm No. 4, between Montgomery and Wetumpka, and hauled to nearby Kilby State prison.

The wooden building—the only barracks at the prison farm—was destroyed.

Night Warden C. N. Carpenter discovered the blaze when it was still small. "I could have put it out with a bucket of water," he said. But pipes were frozen and he couldn't get the water.

Guards and trusty prisoners quickly roused all the convicts, firing pistols and shouting and beating on cells to awaken sleepers.

The fire is believed to have started from the chimney of a coal heater, overtaxed by cold weather.

A-Bomb Use Rejected Early in Korea War

20 Questions

Austin Drafts Queries for Chinese Reds

LAKE SUCCESS, Nov. 26 (AP).—With their troops locked in combat in Korea, diplomatic representatives of the United States and Communist China will confront each other at the United Nations Monday.

They spent today polishing charges and counter-charges for presentation at a morning meeting of the 69-nation political committee and an afternoon Security Council session.

These crucial meetings may supply the answer to the most urgent question of the day—does Red China intend to provoke an all-out war with the United States?

Russia's Jacob A. Malik "promised officially"—to use his own words—that he would open the morning meeting with an outline of his charges that the United States has been guilty of aggression against China. Republican Adviser John Foster Dulles had demanded that this indictment be made public as soon as possible in order to give him an opportunity to prepare the United States reply.

At the Security Council in the afternoon, the United States will be represented by Warren R. Austin, who said he will pepper the Chinese Reds with 20 questions not only about their allegations of American aggression but about the presence of Chinese troops in Korea.

Communist Premier Chou En-lai has asserted that the delegation, headed by Wu Hsui-chuan, is not empowered to discuss that question, but the provisional agenda of the Council meeting links it with the problem of Formosa.

The Chinese charges against the United States are based on the claim that President Truman's order to the Seventh Fleet to "seal off" the island stronghold of the Chinese Nationalists constituted aggression.

They also assert that the United States maintains military forces in Formosa, and has deliberately bombed Manchuria.

The United States answer is that the sealing off of Formosa was to prevent the spread of the Korean war, that the only American soldiers there are attaches at the Embassy and are fewer than those maintained in Moscow, and that the few incidents of bombings in Manchuria were regrettable accidents.

The Peiping government has notified Secretary General Trygve Lie that its delegation is empowered to speak in the political committee as well as the Council. The complaint there must be presented by Russia, however,

By the United Press

The United States Joint Chiefs of Staff considered but voted against dropping atomic bombs on massed Communist troops early in the Korean war, it was disclosed yesterday.

Authoritative sources said the proposal was advanced independently by Army and Air Force officers, when the bulk of the North Korean army was concentrated in a small area near the town of Suwon.

Because approval of President Truman is required to use atomic weapons in war, the question was put up to the top military command here—the Joint Chiefs. They apparently decided on their own that it would be unwise, and did not refer the issue to Mr. Truman.

While their reasons were not revealed, it was believed that moral and diplomatic considerations entered into their decision. At the time, United States authorities were seeking wide support for the stand against Red aggression in Korea, and feared that world sympathy might be alienated by hasty resort to universally dreaded atomic warfare.

Also, at the time a suitable target presented itself, the war was in its first stages and few, if any, military men foresaw what a drubbing United States ground forces would take before a defense line could be stabilized.

The potential A-bomb target was a triangular piece of fairly flat land, with the town of Suwon at its apex. The triangle measured about 25 miles on each side, and within its boundaries were several Red divisions.

It was exactly the sort of troop concentration United States military planners have in mind when they contend that A-bombs can be used as tactical weapons—that is, directly against the enemy's field forces.

Since the Red troops were not evenly distributed all over the general area, it cannot readily be calculated how many A-bombs would have been necessary to accomplish maximum damage.

Despite Truman Order

Chiang's Forces Reported Starting Attacks on Mainland

HONGKONG, Nov. 26 (U.P.).—The Chinese Nationalists have started attacks along the Communist-held coast of the China mainland in defiance of President Truman's policy, reports from Formosa indicated today.

Nationalist warships are now attacking the Communist garrison on Yuhwan Island, in Wenchow Bay, 220 miles south of Shanghai, with the apparent intention of putting a raider force ashore, a report from Formosa said. The report quoted Nationalist military authorities.

Another report said Nationalist warships had resumed patrolling activities along the South China coast and that three Nationalist planes attacked gun positions at the port of Swatow, 175 miles northeast of Hongkong, killing a number of Red troops.

President Truman, in assigning the Seventh Fleet to protect Formosa against a Red attack, made it a condition that the Nationalists should not court trouble by attacking the Communists on the mainland.

Dispatches from Formosa indicate increasing insistence by the Nationalist government that Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's forces be permitted to attack the coast. The Nationalists feel the Communists have been sufficiently weakened by the dispatch of troops to Manchuria, and by growing popular unrest, to make such attacks desirable.

Reports from Shanghai and Canton say the Reds have put all security forces on the alert and that there is mounting anti-Red sentiment in China generally.

A foreigner who left Shanghai a week ago said there were almost daily executions of persons accused of anti-Communist activities.

Reports from Canton said a newly installed air raid alarm system was being tested tonight and that Communist officials continued to evacuate their families northward for safety. It was reported also that 600 Canton postal workers started a go-slow strike, in open defiance of a new anti-strike ban, in protest against "starvation" wages and Red persecutions. The postal workers threatened to call a general strike, the report said.

U.S. to Screen Statistical Data

By The Associated Press

The Budget Bureau yesterday took preliminary steps toward restricting release of Government statistical information where it "might endanger the national security."

Director Frederick J. Lawton, under directions from President Truman, asked all Federal agencies to submit for Budget Bureau approval "any proposals for publication" of statistics "which may involve questions of national security."

Lawton said in a statement the Bureau will take the position that "it is in the national interest to keep restrictions on the publication of statistics to a minimum."

Aides said the Bureau is as much interested in seeing that agencies do not withhold data unnecessarily as in seeing that they do not release matter which might "endanger national security."

All agencies already are required to clear statistical forms and questionnaires with the Bureau so as to keep the number and expense of them at a minimum.

Lawton said President Truman had directed him to:

1. "Maintain a surveillance of the publication of statistics, and to restrict publication whenever, in any instance, release of the information might endanger the national security.

2. "Insure that statistical information ordinarily released to the public, but withheld from general publication because of security considerations, will be released to authorized users in such manner as he (Lawton) may prescribe."

The budget director observed that "statistical series published by different agencies, each of which might be harmless in itself, might be combined to produce information harmful to national security."

Budget Bureau officials said no sweeping restriction of statistics is contemplated now, and that the Bureau is chiefly interested in getting up a "preparedness" plan for restriction if and when necessary.

Flow of Etna Lava Creeps On 6 Villages

CATANIA, Sicily, Nov. 26 (AP).—A molten lava flow 650 feet wide from restless Mount Etna threatened half a dozen villages on the northeastern slopes of the 10,741-foot high mountain today.

The great high cone on Etna in Sicily's eastern coastal belt burst into flames and smoke last night, bringing panic to the surrounding countryside. A series of heavy earth tremors accompanied the volcano's eruption.

Old residents of Catania feared the eruption would be worse than the last big burst of lava, ash and smoke from Etna in December, 1949.

At midday authorities estimated the creeping flow would reach the village of Fornazza about midnight. Fornazza's 1500 inhabitants gathered their belongings at doorways in preparation for quick evacuation of their homes at noon.

The lava, flowing down a steep slope, already had burned off a grove of chestnut trees in its slow trek toward the sea. Shortly after the volcano erupted, lava was belching from six separate mouths below the rim of the crater.

A great plume of smoke was clearly visible from Calabrian coastal towns across the Strait of Messina on the toe of the Italian boot. The sky of eastern Sicily turned deep red and lighted Catania, 20 miles away from the menacing eruption.

The lava flowed down the Valle del Leone (Valley of the Lion) and the Valle del Bove (Valley of the Cow). These slopes lead eastward to the coast in the area of the towns of Giarre and Riposto, some 10 miles from the crater.

Etna has erupted some 80 times in recorded history—as far back as 800 B.C.—and many of these times has brought huge death tolls and extensive destruction.

Albania Rejects Ouster Bid

LONDON, Nov. 26 (U.P.).—The Albanian government has rejected "with contempt" a Yugoslav demand that Albania close its legation in Belgrade and recall its diplomats.

A Tass report from Tirana quoted a Foreign Office statement as saying, "The Albanian government refutes with contempt the malicious intentions and slanders contained in the Yugoslav note . . . and its unjustified demand for the recall of its legation."

The report, monitored here, said the Albanian government blamed Yugoslavia's note of November 11 on the "Fascist aggressive policy of the Yugoslavian government pursued under orders of Anglo-American imperialist masters."

The statement said Yugoslavia's "gross act of expulsion" of the Albanian legation had led to a "rupture of diplomatic relations."

The Albanian reply accused the Yugoslavs of 89 frontier violations and provocations in the past two years. It also accused Yugoslavia of cutting Albanian air communications with the "people's democracies," halting reparations from Germany, cutting postal telegraph communications and disrupting economic relations.

New CARE Bread Line Opened for Yugoslavia

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (AP).—CARE — private, nonprofit "soup kitchen" to the world's down-and-outers — opened a new bread line today for Yugoslavia on the eve of the relief organization's fifth birthday.

Responding to President Truman's appeal to private American citizens and groups to send more food to the drought-stricken Balkan country, CARE has sent 5000 additional food packages to Yugoslavia. It also announced it would allocate a greater part of its general relief fund to Yugoslavia.

Since CARE, formally called Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe, was started five years ago Monday, it has sent overseas more than 100 million dollars worth of food and clothing, or 9½ million separate packages.

Confessed Slayer, 15, Gives Up After Escape

JONESVILLE, Mich., Nov. 26 (AP).—John Rodney McRae, 15-year-old confessed slayer of 8-year-old Joey Housey, walked into the State police post here today and surrendered after a brief taste of freedom.

McRae and a 14-year-old companion escaped last night from the psychiatric division of University Hospital in Ann Arbor, where he was receiving a pretrial psychiatric examination. He and David Miller of Clarkston, a private patient, apparently escaped in a car parked nearby. Miller was picked up by Auburn, Ind., police today.

Chinese Again Charge Violations by French

HONGKONG, Nov. 26 (U.P.).—The Chinese Communists denounced the French again today for alleged violations of the frontier with Indo-China. The Peiping radio said the violations have "evoked widespread protest from Chinese people."

Leading newspapers in Shanghai carried editorials and commentaries "protesting against the provocation of the French government," the broadcast said.

Arc Furnace Explodes

WILDER, Ky., Nov. 26 (U.P.).—An electric arc furnace exploded at the Newport Rolling Mill tonight and set a quarter-mile-long building on fire. There were no reports of injuries.

'Hill' Charges Denied By Lawyers Guild

The National Lawyers Guild yesterday entered a vigorous denial to charges by the House Un-American Activities Committee that it was "the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party."

The Committee, the guild declared in an 18-page brief, is "the chief instrument for undermining the whole democratic process in the United States."

"Using the same methods which have contributed so much to the wave of hysteria sweeping the country," asserted the guild, "the committee now attempts to intimidate and silence a group of lawyers who have consistently and unswervingly sought to carry out their obligation as members of the bar to supply legal leadership in advancing the cause of democracy and social progress.

"Our answer to the Committee is that we will not be intimidated nor silenced."

The Guild's blast at the committee was inspired by a committee report issued last September 17. The reply, reproduced from a forthcoming issue of "The Lawyers Guild Review," was handed to reporters by Yale Law Professor Thomas I. Emerson, Guild president, and Robert J. Silberstein, executive secretary of the organization.

Emerson said the committee report "demonstrates its methods and techniques which, in our opinion, are completely destructive of the democratic process." He said the purpose of the Guild brief was to "bring the issues back to the level on which we feel democratic discussion should take place."

The Guild attack on the report, Emerson said, was designed to:

1. Restate the objectives and policies of the Guild.

2. Attempt to analyze the Committee's methods in its report "to smear the Guild" and to show it used "destructive methods."

3. Refute the committee's charges point by point.

The reply declares that the Guild's purposes, in addition to "furnishing legal leadership" to forces "working for economic and social progress and for the advancement of democracy" were to work generally for such progress. It is, the brief said, composed of lawyers "who regard adjustment to new conditions as more important than the veneration of precedent," and who "look upon the law as a living and flexible instrument which must be adapted to the needs of the people."

The brief stressed that the Guild is not "a Communist organization, nor a Communist front organization, nor dominated by Communists."

Truman Warned on Discipline

By the United Press

Senator Burnet R. Maybank said yesterday that President Truman will head into trouble if he tries to discipline Democrats who refuse to support his legislative program.

"There is no amount of discipline in the world that will make me vote for the Brannan (farm) Plan or socialized medicine," the South Carolina Democrat told a reporter. "They tried to discipline me two years gao for my vote to override the veto of the Taft-Hartley Law. It did me a lot of good in my home state."

Quite a few other Southern Democrats are known to feel the same way.

The hot issue of party regularity—and disciplinary action against Democrats who refuse to support Administration causes—was revived recently when President James G. Patton of the National Farmers Union and Brannan Plan backer, visited Mr. Truman.

Patton said he had urged the President to whip Democrats hestile to his program into line, and that Mr. Truman had agreed it should be a Democratic responsibility to support Administration measures.

The customary way to discipline party dissidents is to deprive them of rich patronage plums, or to see that some pet State project is shelved until the rebels "see the political light."

When the Eighty-second Congress meets January 3, party regularity will be an especially acute problem, as Maybank's remarks indicate.

Boost in Sugar Supply Seen

By The Associated Press

World sugar supplies are likely to be 10 percent larger next year than this, the Agriculture Department said yesterday.

World production during the 1950-51 marketing year was forecast at 35,400,000 short tons, raw value. This compares with 32,100,000 produced in the 1949-50 season, and with 29,100,000 tons for the prewar average. These figures cover sugar produced by the centrifugal process, which is the principal kind moving in international trade.

Production of non-centrifugal sugar was forecast at 5,700,000 tons compared with 6,200,000 last year and 4,900,000 for the perwar average.

Output of beet sugar, all of which is of the centrifugal type, is expected to total about 13,500,000 tons or 16 percent more than the 11,600,000 tons produced last year. It compares with a prewar average of 11,800,000 tons. Such a beet sugar output would be a record.

Beet sugar production is expected to be increased over the 1949-50 crop by 1,300,000 tons in Europe, excluding Russia, with many countries setting new high levels. In the Soviet Union, production this season is expected to be up slightly, but in the United States and Canada production prospects are increased substantially.

The department said world centrifugal cane sugar production is expected to set a new record. The output was forecast at 21,900,000 short tons compared with 20,400,000 last year and a prewar average of 17,300,000.

Utah College Opens Medical Atomic School

SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 26 (AP). The first atomic medical school is starting at the University of Utah.

This school is the newest section of the university's College of Medicine, itself one of the Nation's youngest medical schools, the only one between Denver and the West Coast.

The atomic research is developing under the new dean of the medical college, Dr. John Z. Bowers, who came here in November, 1950. He was deputy director of the United States Atomic Energy Commission's Division of Biology and Medicine, and is medical consultant for the commission for the new Arco, Idaho, site of the great peacetime atomic energy reactors.

One of Utah's projects is the long-time effects of exposure to small amounts of radioactive atoms. What these may be are now unknown, but they will be of great medical importance when atomic energy enters industry. Utah also is studying the effects of uranium on miners.

Lame Duck Congress

The controlling fact about the short session of the Eighty-first Congress beginning today is that it will have 64 lame ducks in the House and 10 in the Senate. A Congress thus unrepresentative of the popular will would be in for rough sledding in any circumstances. To complicate matters, the Senate will be under the leadership of two legislators repudiated at the polls, and the three or four weeks time limit on the session will expose it to every trick of the filibusterers and obstructionists. Only an unforeseen national catastrophe could be expected to galvanize this sort of Congress into vigorous action in its dying days.

When the post-election session was agreed upon last September, the Administration forces thought they would be able to pick up where they were leaving off, with a new mandate behind them. A program in keeping with that idea was tentatively planned. But, if a new mandate has been given, it is something very different from what was contemplated, and the program for the lame-duck session will have to be modified accordingly. Any attempt to drive through such a complicated measure as the excess-profits tax or to repeal the McCarran Act would certainly entangle Congress in bitter wrangling and accomplish nothing.

There is, however, a middle ground between President Truman's whistle-through-the-cemetery attitude and Senator Taft's quip that the lame duck session should merely adjourn. The country is still facing a national emergency. If it does nothing more, Congress may be expected to approve supplemental appropriations to keep the rearmament program moving forward. Almost in the same category is the aid to Yugoslavia requested by the President. Congress could not fail to deal realistically with such emergency issues without inviting the wrath of the electorate irrespective of party.

In our opinion, one other item—rent control—has to be placed in the emergency column. While it would be unreasonable to ask this lame duck Congress to pass a new rent-control law, it would be more unreasonable to let the existing controls lapse at the end of the year without giving the new Congress a chance to build on the existing fundation. It is difficult to see how the Reexaminists who are clamoring for a new look at foreign policies can fail to apply their strategy to the pre-Korea rent-control policy adopted under conditions utterly different from those facing us today.

Aside from these emergency measures, the most that can be expected of the lame duck session is a clearing up of miscellaneous odds and ends. There is a powerful argument for pushing through constructive and seasoned bills on which much work has been done, for the simple reason that they would have to start from scratch in the new session. In this category we should place the Hawaii and Alaska Statehood bills, the District home-rule bill, and the bill for reorganization of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

This is no time for Congress to lapse into unrestrained partisan bickering or the sort of legislative paralysis that afflicted it in the lame duck session of 1932-33. A restricted program will be necessary, but the country cannot afford a disastrous stalemate, and we know of no political faction that can afford to carry the onus of mere obstructionism in these perilous times.

Bonds Instead Of Cash

CIO economists are said to be considering proposals for pay increases in the form of savings bonds. The plan has a certain appeal, as an anti-inflationary device, assuming that the worker who takes part of his pay in the form of bonds regards them as a bona fide investment. The chances are, however, that if payment in bonds became an accepted practice, the average worker would turn them in for redemption after a brief waiting period, and spend as much as he would have if all wage payments had been made in cash. Indeed, the huge amount of redeemable savings bonds already in consumer hands has been a large factor in stimulating demands for goods and inflating prices. Only those people who voluntarily save their money to buy bonds can be relied on to hold them.

If workers were willing to take part of their pay in long-term, nonmarketable savings bonds, that could not be turned into cash until they matured, the inflationary effect of wage increases would be minimized to some extent. But the employer who granted the wage increases would still have to pay for the new type of savings bonds distributed among his employes. As a result, his production costs would rise just as much as if he had made all-cash payments. Consequently, while the inflationary impact of wage increases on consumer spending would be avoided by this novel payment proposal, the prices of the goods produced would be higher. Finally, if the Government were to cooperate in carrying out a plan that comes close to being a method of enforced purchase of its obligations—the last result of financially weak governments—public confidence in its credit standing might be seriously impaired.

Winter From Dixie

Is it true what they say about Dixie?—that on Saturday night it was 10 degrees colder in Macon, Ga., than in Potomac Park?—that in palm-fronded Miami it was only nine degrees warmer than on the outside of the Uline Ice Arena?—that it was barely one degree above zero in Asheville, N. C., and barely three above at Atlanta and actually a half dozen or more degrees below zero in places like Tullahoma, Tenn., and Bowling Green, Ky.? Yes, yes, the fellows at the Weather Bureau assure us sadly, it is true, all too true!

Not only that but all the bitter weather in Washington this weekend has come whipping up to us from the sunny Southland, faster, much faster, than the empty Pullmans of the Orange Blossom Special, carried along by a savage, snarling sirocco with icicle fangs. The same cruel south wind blew the whole top off the Atlantic Ocean and washed it into the eastern coast of New York State, doing vast damage to property, causing the loss of several lives, but probably saving others by putting parts of the Long Island Railroad out of commission for a day or so. Nothing, we dare say, as formidable as that Saturday night sirocco has come out of Dixie since the big Confederate invasions of 1862-63, which, as you know, got no farther than south central Pennsylvania. Unlike those other invaders, the Dixie windstorm didn't bother to pay for any of the stuff it destroyed or carried away; but since General Lee's fellows paid only in their own quaint currencies, perhaps it comes to the same thing.

Of course—let us be fair—the storm was not native to the land of cotton. It was actually a kind of relay or transshipment, like the hill-billy music written on Broadway and broadcast by orchestras at Nashville. Late last week one of those big, bitter-cold Canadian highs eluded the immigration patrols and slipped over the unguarded frontier, only to find itself outflanked, as it were, on the left by another fancy bit of high-pressure work in the upper air. Thus diverted from its original purpose of bringing a premature White Christmas to the Northeastern seaboard, it went screaming and howling down the Appalachians and the lower Ohio Valley, showing a good deal of favoritism as it went, leaving little or none of its snow load in western New York but shooting the works in western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

But when it got to the Gulf of Mexico or thereabouts it suddenly remembered where it was supposed to be going, and so turned around and came up the coast. It was, in short, a kind of frozen cyclone, except that cyclonic storms are supposed to move clockwise and this one went the other way round. Nothing like it (the weather people say) has been known since the big storm of November, 1913, and even that one, it seems, wasn't really much like it. So now, dear reader, we know why it was so much warmer in Boston than in Jacksonville.

All in all, it seems to us that Dixie got a pretty raw meteorological deal this time. Down there, you know, they may with some justice exclaim with the poet:

> O Winter! Bar thine adamantine doors:
> The North is thine; there thou has built thy dark
> Deep-founded habitation. Shake not thy roofs,
> Nor bend thy pillars with thine iron car!

In these latitudes, however, we have no right to say any more than this: "Now, Winter! If you must get the old iron car in motion, please don't try any more of that roller coaster stuff with it. We know we have to have you for a guest now and then, but it's nicer when we know where to look for your arrival."

Indo-China's Choice

The chief question about the French grant of real independence to the three states of Indo-China is whether it has come too late. Over a long period the French have been engaged in a losing fight in Indo-China because of the widespread suspicion that they were interested chiefly in re-establishing colonialism in that area. The French had previously granted Viet Nam a 90 percent independence, but the rebel forces under Communist leadership continued to command powerful native support (in addition to aid from China) because of the fear that Emperor Bao Dai is a mere puppet of France. It is a matter of keen regret that the French waited so long to undermine the assertions by the rebels that only they can give the people of Indo-China the independence they crave.

Belated action, however, is much better than no action at all. Under the pressure of military defeats and American opinion, the French have now agreed to give the associated states of Indo-China—Viet Nam, Laos and Cambodia—control of their own affairs while buttressing efforts to save them from Communist domination. On both the political and military sides the move is constructive. The removal of most of the French functionaries in Indo-China from their posts by January 1 and the complete elimination from Indo-China of taxes for the benefit of France will be tangible evidence of the new independence. While the three states are to remain within the French Union, they are also free to demonstrate their new status by sending representatives to other countries.

Perhaps even more impressive to the Oriental mind will be the development of an Indo-Chinese army under direct command of Bao Dai. The new spirit of partnership is to be further emphasized by committing 25,000 new French troops and more than 300 million dollars worth of American military equipment to the fight against the Communist-led rebels. Even though the issue has been blurred by French delay and Communist propaganda, the people of Indo-China should now be able to see that their choice lies between the attainment of nationalism and independence with French-American help and the acquisition of new masters who take their direction from Moscow.

Good Investment

Any lingering doubt about the wisdom of aiding drought-stricken Yugoslavia should be set at rest by the agreement reached with Marshal Tito providing that food for his army, donated by the United States, shall be used exclusively to further the purposes of the United Nations Charter and to prevent the weakening of the defenses of the country. The aid already furnished by President Truman is, however, insufficient to tide the country over the period between harvests. Additional funds should be voted by Congress to avert hunger and political disorders that might deprive western Europe of a powerful potential ally, whose army is the largest in all Europe outside of Russia. Even in simple dollars-and-cents terms it would be unreasonable for the most economy-minded men in Congress to reject the sort of military bargain that the Administration wants to make with Tito. Money spent to aid Yugoslavia is, in fact, an investment that promises to yield high returns by strengthening the defenses of western Europe against Soviet aggression where they are weakest—in manpower.

While military expediency is an all-sufficient argument for passing the Yugoslavian aid bill, it is also worth remembering that the United States does not make a practice of denying help to needy people merely because they are ruled by dictators, although hard necessity would undoubtedly compel us to withhold aid from potential enemy countries whose governments we dare not risk strengthening. In the case of Yugoslavia, the United States is taking a calculated risk in shoring up a Communist regime that has as little regard for the rights of the individual as Russia and her satellites and has in the past subjected American citizens to equally harsh treatment. But the risk incurred is negligible compared with the gains that will result if we succeed in detaching her permanently from her former alliance with Moscow. The cost of such aid can be met in part, as Senator Thomas of Oklahoma suggests, by giving some of our Government-owned food surpluses to Yugoslavia.

Dangling Comission

Publication of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission's "comprehensive plan for the National Capital and its environs" serves as a reminder that the chairmanship of the commission is vacant and that its long-pending reorganization bill is still awaiting action. The report itself is sufficient indication of how vital expert planning will be to Washington in the months and years immediately ahead. Passage of this bill seems to us of sufficient importance that it should be a "must" for the brief session of the Eighty-first Congress that will assemble today.

There has been some opposition to the bill in Maryland and Virginia because it would give those States only one representative apiece on the planning body. At present, however, those States are not represented at all on the NCPPC. With the Government about to launch a dispersal program for strategic agencies in Washington, decisions of the utmost importance to nearby Virginia and Maryland communities will have to be made. It seems to us far more important that those States should have some voice in the initial planning than none at all, and that is the issue which this bill really poses.

In addition, of course, it is urgent to have on the books the provision of the NCPPC reorganization bill requiring all District and Federal agencies to consult with the commission in the initial stages of projects to be built in the vicinity of the Capital. Also the President is reluctant to name a new chairman of the commission until the proposed law takes effect. Certainly this is no time to leave so important a body dangling at loose ends. The bill has already been passed by the Senate, and the mere economy of congressional energy should be enough to insure that it will be promptly brought to a vote in the House.

WOODLOT COUNTINGHOUSE

As others rule their books and sum amounts
I pile my woodshed walls with stove-length cuts,
Each wall a ledger in the year's accounts;
Knotted old apple and tough hemlock butts,
White birch and silver birch, the rugged bark
Of maple, and pine kindling clean and dry,
Each entry certified by handsaws's mark
And stacked in double column, arm-reach high.

When daylight shortens here among the hills
And chores draw in from fields to barn and shed,
I like to watch the sunset, as it fills
My woodpile with the winter light ahead.
The chopping block's a chair now. Drawn the line.
My books are balanced, and the profit mine!

"Counsel For Pariahs"

An editorial in your issue of November 20 questioned the courage and integrity of present members of the United States Bar. Your writer assumed as his basic premise that the 11 convicted Communist leaders acted in good faith in complaining that 24 "leaders of the bar" had refused to argue their case before the Supreme Court and that they were thus forced to seek counsel from London.

I question the good faith of Communists at any time, and particularly of these Communists whose past record speaks for itself. I suggest that this latest attack is merely another devious attempt to discredit our American system. I suggest, further, that you have unwittingly fallen into their trap by giving them exactly the credulous publicity they desire.

May I recommend that before any of us question the character of all attorneys, we first ask a few questions: How do these Communists define a "leader of the bar?" Who were the 24 persons they approached? (Were these, perhaps, specialists in tax law or corporation law, who the Communists would know in advance would refuse a criminal case?) Are there only 24 good lawyers in our entire country, or do the Communists seek to import a London attorney for the publicity effect?

May I particularly recommend that we Americans be not quite so anxious to believe "disreputable characters" at the expense of our own citizens of proved reputation and character.

Post Pictures

I wish to commend the pictorial policy of The Washington Post, in such pictures as "In Reverence as the New Testament is Read" on the front page of November 19.

Too often these days the pictorial policy of a newspaper is to single out for publication chiefly photographs of disaster—auto wrecks, plane crashes, murderers behind bars, grotesquely dead soldiers, weeping women at mine explosions, charred ruins of homes, victims of gunmen, "X marks the spot," and so on.

All such photographs tend to re-create in the beholder the emotions of the persons shown. Not only are fear, horror, despair, agony, hatred, and misery induced consciously or subconsciously in the beholder, but his mental atmosphere is conditioned for negative and destructive thoughts of his own.

I think I detect in The Post a policy that includes pictures meant to inspire emotions of reverence, beauty, tenderness, magnanimity, awe, admiration for childhood and old age, and so on. The photography, too, is superior. Your staff photographers are to be praised for recognizing the fact that news photos do not have to be concerned with violence in order to possess human interest.

Sickness Insurance

A number of insurance plans are available to the general public and to special groups of employes interested in health insurance. Generally, these plans cover the cost of medical attention when needed because of an accident, doctor's fees if a surgical operation is to be performed, and various sums paid for specific items used in connection with hospital care. The idea is to provide protection for major medical costs, and it is asserted by these insuring companies that the premium necessary for adding sick benefits would be prohibitive. Yet, a real need exists for such benefits, which in these days of rising costs everywhere make sickness an expensive luxury.

The medical profession generally has been up in arms against the very thought of socialized medicine, and much has been written against it. But the medical profession has not put forth—at least in some place where the average person could see it—a plan which could insure persons of moderate income against sickness as well as hospitalization at a price that the average person could pay. There are many illnesses in the treatment of which the attending physician advises the patient to stay at home.

A sickness of this kind may be one which requires quarantine. It may be one which requires an attendant, or some special equipment. The kinds of sickness which may be paid for under such a plan should be classified so that any chance of fraud would be minimized.

If such insurance could be offered the general public by or under the sponsorship of the American Medical Association a real service would be rendered, and at the same time a concrete answer could be given to the challenge of socialized medicine.

Presidential Cup Game

The so-called Presidential Cup Game scheduled to be played here soon is doomed to failure.

First of all you have a couple of distinctly third-rate teams in Georgia and Texas A. & M.

Secondly the prices to be charged for this untimely contest are atrocious.

Thirdly—they are making a fetish of "bowl games" and are forgetting the essential purpose of schools today, i.e., the acquisition of an education.

I am shocked that the President would lend his influence to this scheme.

Which page of The Washington Post will the Interstate Commerce Commission read?

Page 1B, November 21: In seeking a 14.1 percent fare increase on commuter tickets, the B. & O. told the Interstate Commerce Commission that a 34-million-dollar passenger service deficit in 1949 was one of the most serious problems facing the company.

Page 8B, same issue: B. & O. President Roy B. White told stockholders that a net income for the first 10 months was 11.9 million dollars, a gain of 119 percent over 1949, and that the B. & O. expects to add an additional 8.7 million dollars annually from new business.

School Bond Defeat

I am sorry that Mr. Stan Stanton (letter published November 13) holds the Arlington Citizens Committee for School Improvement, and myself, responsible for the defeat of the school bond referendum in the November 7 Arlington County election.

However, he is probably quite right in suggesting the citizens committee made mistakes during the campaign. I'm sure a great many mistakes were made.

I am willing to take my share of the blame—or all of it, for that matter—if by fixing blame the supporters of new school construction can get their minds fully onto the task that still lies ahead. That task is to explain over and over to the people of Arlington that defeat of the bond issue did not solve the problem. Our 35,000 children (only 16,000 in school, 19,000 still to enter) must have new schools. Presumably another bond election will have to be scheduled within a few months. Many of the persons who voted against the bonds will have to be convinced that to "pay as we use" through a bond issue is really the only way to keep the children from half-day sessions, from attending school in makeshift quarters, and from overcrowded classes beyond the capacity of the teachers to teach.

"Science Foundation"

The Office of Naval Research agrees with The Washington Post editorial "Science Foundation" of November 12, in its appreciation of the need for a sound national science policy which will foster research in all fields, including that of scientific manpower. We, too, are looking forward towards the active participation of the National Science Foundation in such a strong program.

The editorial, however, is in error when it states that "the accent in military programs is always on applied research, whereas so-called pure and basic research is the fuel of later application." The Office of Naval Research (ONR) has been designated by Congress and the Navy to conduct pure and basic research in broad fields in physical and medical science of Navy interest. At present, ONR is administering a contract-research program in over 200 university and industrial laboratories on over 1200 projects.

Many of the best-known scientists in the country are receiving support in this work. It should be noted, furthermore, that a very large portion of the basic physical research in the United States is being supported by this office, and that many of the scientists just named on the board of the National Science Foundation are participants of the ONR setup.

Almost 90 percent of the ONR contracts are in basic research with no "applied" strings attached, for the Navy is fully aware that a sound basic research policy is the foundation of later developments on the applied side. Most of our projects come in as research proposals originating with the individual scientist. These projects are selected and supported within the limitations of the budget and the policies of ONR. The scientific investigator is then given full freedom to follow his own bent in completing his work. ONR feels that such projects pay off in basic scientific data and new techniques which can then be analyzed and applied to Navy needs.

ONR is happy to see the National Science Foundation come into being as an active force in the national science picture. We feel that our five years of experience in administering basic research will be valuable as a guide to policies of the foundation. But Government sponsorship of pure research is not entirely new. The other services also have programs in fundamental research and an excellent exchange of information exists so that each service can utilize the work of the others.

Attention also is invited to the fact that most of our research is unclassified and is made available to universities, industry and other interested agencies, in the same manner as no doubt the work of the National Science Foundation will be made available. Thus, it can be seen that since the war, basic research has had considerable support which has filled in the gap awaiting the establishment of the National Science Foundation.

Matter Of Fact

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

The Innocent Sacrifice

AS CONGRESS gathers for the special session, it grows more and more obvious that the position of Secretary of State Dean G. Acheson has become all but impossible.

The world situation has deteriorated to the point where the problem before Congress may be described as the simple survival of the United States. Yet the Senators and Representatives, in their present mood, will not even discuss the problem in a rational manner. And they will certainly refuse to vote the great measures on which national survival now depends, so long as Dean Acheson is at the State Department.

In this situation borrowed from a nightmare, many leading Democrats have already pressed President Truman to find a new Secretary of State who can deal with the Congress on more reasonable terms. Thus far, however, the President has answered that he would never ask for Acheson's resignation. And he has added that Acheson is the victim of the foreign and domestic policy the world situation has forced him to sponsor; and that any other man who presented the same policy would soon be in the same hot water on Capitol Hill.

The Truman argument implies that the Congress and the country are incapable of understanding the peril we are in. In that case, the end is not far off. In fact, however, this is not the cause of the fate that has overtaken Dean Acheson. He is really the victim of President Truman himself.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED to Acheson was all too clearly suggested by his experience at the Governors' Conference last spring. With considerable difficulty, Thomas E. Dewey secured a serious hearing for Acheson from his hostile fellow-Governors. For four gruelling hours, the Secretary described the menace of Soviet imperialism in all its grim detail. At the close, Gov. Luther Youngdahl of Minnesota reportedly summed up the general reaction with the remark:

"Well, what Secretary Acheson has been telling us certainly makes what Senator McCarthy has been talking about look like pretty small potatoes."

Here is the clew to what-might-have-been. If the Truman Administration, from 1948 onward, had used the same frankness with the American people as Acheson used with the Governors, the popular response would have been like Governor Youngdahl's. Instead, in this crucial period, the President took as his motto his own oft-repeated phrase, "everything is going to be all right." Many dreadful warnings that everything was going to be all wrong were cheerfully ignored.

This tragic period of our policy-making reached its climax last winter and spring. Acheson himself finally began to speak out truthfully about the world crisis. But almost every time Acheson made one of his doom-filled speeches, the President told his next press conference that the outlook for peace "had never been better," and Louis A. Johnson followed up with some more "defense economies."

ACHESON HIMSELF also took the lead in formulating the famous Security Council directive No. 69, acknowledging the increasing menace of the world crisis, and calling for much greater American efforts to create "situations of strength" in the free world. But the ink was hardly dry on this paper, before it became clear that nothing much was going to be done about it. Only the Kremlin's miscalculation in Korea rescued us from this cataleptic torpor, which would certainly have led to total catastrophe.

Long before Korea, meanwhile, the American people instinctively perceived everything was not going to be all right. They grew deeply uneasy. Their uneasiness was shrewdly exploited by Senator McCarthy and his allies. And Acheson particularly exposed himself to attack, by his unexpected but extreme maladroitness in dealing with Congress and the public. (This derived, one suspects, from Acheson's own inner sense of being in a false position, as a Secretary of State knowing that national survival demanded much greater national efforts, but unable to convince his chief and his colleagues.)

The outcome is shockingly unjust. The only high official who was consistently on the right side has become the accidental scapegoat for the Administration's inadequacies. Unfortunately, however, the practical fact must be faced. The Truman Administration is now like the troika in the old Russian folk tales. The way has been lost in the forest. The horses are tired. The wolves are snapping at the traces. The driver must toss his baby to the wolves, or the whole equipage will be lost. Dean Acheson is the baby, the innocent sacrifice that must in the end be made.

Piercing the Curtain

With all the emphasis I am capable of, let me salute Drew Pearson's admirable and practical suggestions about how to win the Iron Curtain fight. His suggested steps—the President calling Republican chiefs into conclave with him to frame a real foreign policy; the setting up societies for free Russia, here and elsewhere; and the promoting of discontent behind the curtain among the already disgruntled mujiks and other Russian folk—seem simple, logical and effective.

U.S. Sought To Aid Britain And Still Avoid War in 1940

our strategy should be to render every assistance possible to Great Britain without ourselves entering the war, but would we be rendering every assistance possible to Great Britain were we to give our attention wholly and exclusively to the problems of the immediate defense of the British Isles and of Britain s control of the Atlantic? The British Isles, the British in those Isles, have been able to exist and to defend themselves not only because they have prepared strong local defenses but also because as the heart and the nerve center of the British Empire they have been able to draw upon vast resources for their sustenance and to bring into operation against their enemies economic, military and naval pressures on a world-wide scale. They live by importing goods from all parts of the world and by utilizing large overseas financial resources. They are defended not only by measures of defense carried out locally but also by distant and wide-spread economic, military, and naval activities which both diminish the vital strength of their enemies and at the same time prevent those enemies from concentrating the full force of their armed power against the heart and the nerve center of the Empire.

The British need assistance along the lines of our generally established policies at many points, assistance which in the case of the Far East is certainly well within the realm of "possibility" so far as the capacity of the United States is concerned. Their defense strategy must in the nature of things be global. Our strategy of giving them assistance toward ensuring our own security must envisage both sending of supplies to England and helping to prevent a closing of channels of communication to and from various parts of the world, so that other important sources of supply and other theaters of action will not be denied to the British. We have no intention of being "sucked into" a war with Germany. Whether there will come to us war with either or both of those countries will depend far more upon what they do than upon what we deliberately refrain from doing.

Regarding your suggestion that you make a trip to Chungking, as you well know, I desire that you and your nearby (!) Ambassadors each and all be as fully informed regarding the whole situation in the Far East as is practically possible. Each of you occupies a very important position where the responsibilities and problems are heavy and perplexing. There have to be balanced the very tangible advantages of the United States which accrue when each of you is at his post against the potential advantages which would result from visits by one of you to another. I doubt whether there exists any special need which would render it imperatively desirable that you proceed to Chungking in the near future, and I should prefer that you hold any such plan in abeyance. I am considering suggesting that Johnson, if and when the situation permits him to be absent from Chungking, pay a brief visit to Manila, principally in the thought that, having now been at Chungking continuously for many months where he has had to undergo almost constant bombings in a trying and somewhat primitive environment, a change of scene would be very helpful to him.

With best wishes for a good New Year, I am

Very sincerely yours,

Sayre had advised that, despite the growing tension in the Far East, we should not become embroiled in a war with Japan, for the future of the Far East depended on the fate of England and we should allow nothing to divert us from aiding that country.

F. D. R. to Harold L. Ickes

THE WHITE HOUSE,
June 16, 1941

Memorandum for Hon. Harold Ickes:

I do wish that you would take off the occasional hair shirt which you put on in regard to a plan of the State Department to create a Caribbean Division. I have carefully checked and I think that somebody must have been trying to plant an April Fool's Day joks on you. There never has been such a plan. You sure are "objecting to something that isn't contemplated." Forget it. All quiet in the Caribbean! F.D.R.

Ickes was worried lest a joint Anglo-American committee dealing with problems in the Caribbean area might result in the Division of Territories being moved from Interior to State.

F. D. R. to Adolf A. Berle, Jr.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

Memorandum for Hon. Adolf Berle:

I have not the slightest objection towards your trying your hand at an outline of the post-war picture. But for Heaven's sake don't ever let the columnists hear of it.

When I saw Keynes three weeks ago, I told him I did not like the proposed speech of Eden's because while we could all agree on objectives, we could all fight about the machinery to obtain them. He got Eden to eliminate the methods—and we should follow that idea over here.

Don't forget that the elimination of costly armaments is still the keystone—for the security of all the little nations and for economic solvency. Don't forget that I discovered —that over ninety percent of all national deficits from 1921 to 1939 were caused by payments for past, present and future wars. F. D. R.

Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden's speech on May 29th was the first statement by a leading Allied official on war aims. It proclaimed social security on a worldwide scale as the basic post-war objective. Prophetically he stated: "Liberated countries, and maybe others too, will require an initial pool of resources to carry them through the transitional period."

Berle was then Assistant Secretary of State.

F. D. R. to Dorothy Thompson in New York

THE WHITE HOUSE,
June 26, 141

Dear Dorothy Thompson:

I think your idea of a hard-boiled little bureau to give Adolf a little electric spark on the same identical spot of his anatomy every two seconds while he encumbers the earth is grand. Do please see Bill Donovan on this. We have got to the point of being almost set to install the larger organization of which your idea would be a definite part.

As ever,

Dorothy Thompson had written F.D.R. that the expenditure of a few million dollars on short-wave propaganda would bring more results than a couple of battleships. A "hard-boiled' bureau of journalists, speakers, and other artists could organize a "war of nerves" which would drive Hitler into an insane asylum.

F. D. R. to Harold L. Ickes

HYDE PARK,
July 1, 1941

Dear Harold:

There you go again! There ain't nothing unfriendly about me, and I guess it was the hot weather that made you think there was a lack of friendly tone!

As a matter of fact, I think the whole business of exports to Japan was made difficult by the press and the press only—including perhaps just a pinch of State Department snootiness thrown in. Both of these are elements that we have to live with whether we like it or not.

You are doing a good job as Petroleum coordinator — so much so that it looks to me as if you will have to take unto your manly bosom the coordination of the whole power situation if things get any worse. That would include, of course, coal—hard and soft—water power, and domestic consumption of all of them.

I think it would interest you to know that the Japs are having a real drag-down and knock-out fight among themselves and have been for the past week—trying to decide which way they are going to jump—attack Russia, attack the South Seas (thus throwing in their lot definitely with Germany) or whether they will sit on the fence and be more friendly with us. No one knows what the decision will be but, as you know, it is terribly important for the control of the Atlantic for us to help keep the peace in the Pacific. I simply have not got enough Navy to go round—and and every little episode in the Pacific means fewer ships in the Atlantic.

I am still running a bit of a temperature and wish this flu would clear up.

As ever yours.

Ickes had told F.D.R. that he did not think that embargoing would influence Japan either way. In his opinion, the chief factor in Japan's decision on her next move would be Hitler's success in Russia. In November F.D.R. appointed Ickes Solid Fuels Coordinator, which covered all the jobs mentioned in this letter except water power.

Reds Hurl Allies Back

COUNTERATTACK—Open arrows (A) mark northwest sector of the North Korean front where Chinese Red units forced U. N. troops to retreat. Tokchon was retaken, but United States troops dug in along the Chongchon River, with other elements moving up to reinforce the right side of the line. To the east (B), however, South Koreans pushed beyond Chongjin and Hapsu. On the Yalu River, United States troops expanded their front and Marines seized Yudam, on the Changjin Reservoir

U.N. Offensive Stalled by Counter-Attack

ond Division back across the Chongchon River.

A U. S. Eighth Army spokesman said the South Korean Second Corps still held the road center of Tokchon, 58 miles northeast of the former Red capital of Pyongyang.

A United States First Corps spokesman said Sunday that Red forces had retaken the town as they smashed back the South Koreans 6 to 11 miles on the right flank of the northwest front.

The Eighth Army spokesman said the South Korean Seventh Division was reorganizing in Tokchon and that the South Korean Eighth Division was reorganizing nearby.

United States Cavalry Division troops, held in reserve during the first two days of the offensive, were rushed up to bolster the South Koreans.

United States B-26 night bombers hit hard at Red troops and supply points pinpointed by bursts of white phosphorous shells. During the day B-29 medium bombers and Allied fighters swarmed over the battle zone.

Associated Press Correspondent Tom Lambert reported that the Red counterattack overran one United States Second Division artillery battalion. Gunners were forced to abandon many guns.

The Reds infiltrated into another artillery battalion, which leveled its 105-mm howitzers to duel with the Reds at close range —only 100 to 200 yards away.

Lambert estimated the Reds suffered many casualties from artillery fire and air strikes, but also reported that from the number of American wounded treated at aid stations and being hauled by ambulance to the rear, American casualties "will not be small."

Late Sunday, Second Division troops dug in on the north bank of the Chongchon River near Won and on the south side of the river northwest of Kujang. Troops normally used in noncombatant work were called up to help hold the line where it bent eastward into the ROK Second Corps area.

Brig. Gen. J. Sladden Bradley, assistant commander of the United States Second Division, told reporters he expected "some music" Sunday night, meaning new attacks. Bradley said there was "dammed little left of one company." Another unit, he said, was "pretty well manhandled."

The ROK Capital Division entered shattered Chongjin from three sides and pounded eight miles beyond along a coastal road. Resistance was negligible, the United States Tenth Corps reported. Chongjin, 55 air miles south of Siberia, was the last big Communist port short of the border.

Another South Korean division, the Third, pressing forward 6 miles, reached a point only 35 air miles below the Manchurian border north of Hapsu. It was aided by strong air support.

The United States Seventh Division sent its Thirty-second Regiment ahead 6 miles to approach within 10 miles of the Manchurian border city of Hyesanjin, already occupied by the Seventeenth Regimental Combat Team. The Seventeenth widened its frontage on the icy Yalu River to 10 miles with the capture of Posang to the east.

Farther south the United States Marine Division pushed a Chinese Red battalion out of Yudam on the northwest side of the Changjin reservoir, but most of its action during the day was confined to light patrols.

The Marines received air reports that snow tracks indicated "numerous" Red troops were pulling back north into Manchuria. The Leathernecks were inclined to minimize these reports. Struck hard by two Chinese divisions in early November, the Marines were not taking undue chances as they skirted the Changjin reservoir. It had provided important hydro-electric power links for Red Manchuria.

The Chinese counterdrives kicked off shortly after midnight Saturday in the light of a "bomber's moon."

On the west flank, the Second remained astride the main road about 16 miles southwest of Huichon.

The heaviest Red assault was aimed east of the United States Second Division, where the ROK Sixth, Seventh and Eighth Divisions make up the extreme east end of the United Nations line.

OF BOOKS AND BRENTANO'S

Observing international events today is something like watching a tennis match. Back and forth the attention jumps, from one distant corner of the earth to another. The latest trouble spot is a land that history has forgotten until now . . . It is, for example, a country where there are no automobiles, no electricity, no radios, no newspapers, not even a simple wagon. It has a fabulous golden-roofed palace of 1000 rooms, erected painfully by hand to almost the height of the Empire State Building. It's a primitive, backward country, yet gold-roofs, rare jewels and expensive costumes abound. Its gods are said to destroy all foreigners who cross its borders uninvited. Its 200,000 lamas and monks have complete authority over its 4 million people. It's the last feudal country on earth, and its name, of course, is Tibet . . . Published today, coincidentally enough, (and an example of timely publishing if ever there was one) is OUT OF THIS WORLD: ACROSS THE HIMALAYAS TO FORBIDDEN TIBET ($3.75), by Lowell Thomas Jr., who, judging from this at least, is a chip off the old block. If you were among the fortunate who saw Thomas Sr. and Jr. in Washington last winter, you have already heard some of the exciting true adventures which fill this book . . . the details of the perilous journey across the Himalayas, the meeting with the Dalai Lama, the intimate interviews with the rulers of the country, who, even then, were concerned with the imminence of Communist 'liberation' . . . There are 100 revealing photographs, 32 in full color. For an up-to-the-minute picture of our latest igniting point, or for just plain exciting reading, don't miss OUT OF THIS WORLD: ACROSS THE HIMALAYAS TO FORBIDDEN TIBET.

Boothby to Direct Red Cross Campaign

Boothby

Everett J. Boothby, president of the Washington Gas Light Co., has been appointed head of the 1951 Washington Red Cross fund campaign, John Clifford Folger, District Red Cross Chapter chairman, said yesterday.

Boothby has served with the gas company since 1932, when he came here as its vice president and general manager. He was named president in 1949. A director of the McLachlen Banking Corp., Boothby also is a past president of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association and chairman of the Washington Better Business Bureau.

He is a member of the Kiwanis, Metropolitan and Columbia Country Clubs of Washington. He lives at 204 Kennedy dr., Kenwood, Md.

In accepting the appointment, Boothby called for "substantially increased contributions from everyone" because of expanding services of the organization.

"The Korean situation has made it necessary for additional Red Cross expansion—in the blood program, the volunteer services program, home service, first aid, nursing service and every Red Cross activity," Boothby said. "This program . . . and the tremendous civil defense training program the Red Cross has undertaken, means the Red Cross must have the support of everyone this year."

The Gallup Poll

Voters View U. S. A-Bomb As No Comfort in Case of War

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 26.—American advantage over Russia in atom bomb production is being taken as no great source of comfort by the American people.

Only one person out of every five questioned in a public opinion survey thinks that American A-bomb attacks on Russia, in the event of a war, would lead to a quick victory.

Most adults believe, on the contrary, that it would be a long hard struggle despite our A-bombs, or that atom bombing would not make a great deal of difference in the outcome.

This survey was conducted with the dual purpose of determining how many Americans hold to the theory of atomic "push button" warfare with quick easy victory, and how many believe that our defense plans should concentrate on A-bombing at the expense of developing other types of warfare.

This latter point is of crucial importance, since our military planning prior to Korea was geared heavily to big attack bombers carrying air warfare to the enemy.

Here are the poll results:

"People hold three different views about the damage the United States could do to Russia with atom bomb attacks if there were another world war. With which ONE of the following statements do you, yourself, agree?

"A. Atom bomb attacks would do a lot of damage to Russia and would help the United States greatly to win the war, but it would still be a hard struggle. 37%

"B. Atom bomb attacks would do some damage to Russia but would not make a great deal of difference in the outcome of the war. 18

"C. Atom bomb attacks would hurt Russia so much that the United States could win very easily." 22

Don't know 23

Educated Least Optimistic

The survey reveals that the more education a person has had, the more convinced he is that atom bombing would bring no quick victory.

Here is the vote by amount of education:

	College	High School	Grade School
A. Would help but still hard struggle	47%	42%	30%
B. Would make no great difference	25	21	14
C. We would win easily...	13	21	25
Don't know....	15	16	31
	100%	100%	100%

Critics of American military policy during the past few years have contended that our strategists should shift their thinking toward combat teamwork on land, sea and in the air, in preference to emphasis on long range bombing by giant airships.

Woman Sees Her 40th Grandchild Baptized

The Washington Post

Mrs. Henrietta Briggs, 69-year-old Bethesda grandmother, finds her Christmas shopping list keeps growing and growing.

Yesterday, for example, Mrs. Briggs was present at the baptism of her fortieth grandchild.

At the Marvin Memorial Methodist Church, Four Corners, Md., the proud grandmother beamed as the 3½-month-old granddaughter, Marily Jean Briggs, was baptized.

It was exactly 28 years ago that the first grandchild was christened, Mrs. Briggs recalled, with the precision of one who is kept busy keeping an accurate count of the offspring.

The current total: 26 grandsons and 14 granddaughters.

"It's getting a little hard to remember names and ages . . . let me see now . . . ," she said, then added:

"Guess we got them all ages—from 3 months to 28 years."

Energetic Mrs. Briggs is planning a trip to California next month. There she'll visit her daughter, Mrs. Dorothy Vaccaro, who has a son fighting in Korea.

It was 50 years ago that she and Arthur Briggs married and settled in Rockville. Her husband died in 1924. They had 14 children, two of whom later died.

When the Rev. Marion Michael held her fortieth grandchild and repeated the baptismal verse, Grandmother Briggs said she felt "a little nervous."

The parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Briggs, with whom she lives at Route 3, MacArthur blvd., Bethesda, told her "You'll just have to get used to the idea." The Robert Briggs have an older daughter, 2-year-old Janet Lee.

Avid Appetites Lead to Trouble; Three Are Jailed

Three men planning a Sunday feast of meat, chicken and lobster, with tablecloth and napkins, ate a much simpler fare without napery in the central cell block yesterday.

Detective Nicholas Genua of the First Precinct Station upset the plans when he said he nabbed the men removing the fancy viands—about $30 worth—at the back of Ruby Foo's restaurant, 728 13th st. nw., at 3 a. m. yesterday.

Police identified the prisoners as Raymond Payne, 30, 15 R st. ne.; Benjamin Kitchell, 23, 1652 Reeves ct. nw., and Norman Colbert, 33, 1712 3d st. nw. All were charged with petty larceny.

Nepalese Party Plans Civil Disobedience

NEW DELHI, India, Nov. 26 (AP). The Nepalese Congress Party, which led the revolt against the regime of Nepal's dictator-premier, Lieut. Gen. Mohun Shamsher, has set December 15 for the beginning of a non-violence campaign of civil disobedience.

The party executive, meeting in Banaras, India, today, decided to send 82-year-old D. P. Sapkota across Nepal territory to preach the new gospel to the people. He is a member of the Nepal royal family exiled 40 years ago by the Prime Minister.

Biblical Parallels Noted for 'Hill' Problems

A Washington minister yesterday found parallels in the difficulties facing the new session of Congress with some of the problems and negative attitudes in the Old Testament.

The Rev. Dr. C. Leslie Glenn of St. John's Episcopal Church, 821 16th st. nw., suggested that the opening of Congress is the unfolding of another chapter in God's purpose. "Our high taxes, our dangers, the Russian threat are not meaningless accidents," he said. "They are God's hands forcing us to move faster than we like toward creating a better world."

He declared that both political parties could quote the Bible because the same partisanship, bitterness, and differences of opinion prevailed 3000 years ago.

God is working today as well as in our past, Dr. Glen said. "The question is only how fast we can go toward helping the rest of the world. On that there may be an honest difference of opinion when Congress opens."

The McCarran Act was denounced yesterday by the Rev. Ross Allen Weston at the Unitarian Church of Arlington as the "greatest moral and political disaster that has ever occurred in this Nation."

He called it authoritarian legislation passed by a hysterical Congress.

The McCarran Act is the Nation's first iron curtain, and "it will lead eventually to other authoritarian legislation that will be used against every one of us—Republicans, Democrats and Socialists," Weston said.

If the courts do not pronounce the act unconstitutional, Weston declared, the country may take it as the beginning of the end of democratic freedoms.

The act, passed last summer, was a blanket measure designed to protect the country from un-American and subversive activity.

Army Red Tape Snarls Factfinding

If you want to find out how much an Army major general makes, don't try to get it from The Pentagon without a writ of habeas corpus.

An effort to find out bogged down yesterday in the sort of red tape for which the Army has been noted since first a man tried to exchange a pair of 7B shoes for 9AA. It went like this:

A call to Defense Department public relations brought a search for an Army Register, which couldn't be found. The obliging man on duty at public relations transferred the call to the Adjutant General's Office.

There a colonel said he had the register, all right, but was prohibited by Army order from reading the pay scales out of the back. When it was pointed out that the register was a public document, on sale at the Government Printing Office, and that the Russians probably own one, he said he was sorry. He said if the caller would telephone the public relations and have them call him, he would be glad to read the figures to public relations, who could then relay them to the caller.

How much does a major general make, anyhow? And why?

One On the Aisle

This Mexican Is A Camera Artist

By Richard L. Coe

THE PLAZA has a picture of exceptional visual beauty. This is a Mexican release, with English subtitles, "La Paloma," superbly photographed by Gabriel Figueroa, who made "The Pearl."

Another virtue of this leisurely film is its music, folk songs affectingly done and guitar music played by one Bribiesca.

One of the most enjoyable aspects of foreign pictures is a kind of indigenous tone which sometimes transmits itself to those who are foreign to the makers and, alas, sometimes misses this liaison completely. In the present example, the feel is there to grip you. Rightly or wrongly, the atmosphere I got was a timeless sense of manana; the pace creates this, as do the realistic settings of the simple village we visit.

The story of Emilio Fernandez tells you about a young man on parole from a prison to which he'd been sent upholding the honor of his lady. The villagers either view his return listlessly or actively don't want him back, as in the case of the family who had wronged him six years before.

The young man's years in prison have made a recluse of his beloved and her young son and have killed his mother. But with sturdy heart, he tries to pick up the pieces of an old, peaceful existence. Faithful neighbors help him with his crop, his wife comes out of her lonely shell, but the old enemies resort to force and violence to drive him from the town. Finally the little family is driven out, but as they go, you feel that a good future will be theirs.

It is in the deliberate camera studies that the picture excels. The players are well chosen and each frame is a striking picture. The countryside scenes of clouds and small hills are caught with an affectionate sense of earthly wonder.

Figueroa, the cameraman, has made his name at just such photography as this. He received an American award for his work on "The Pearl" and he's been similarly honored at such film festivals as Venice, Cannes and Locarno.

Among the songs are "Dos Arbolitos," "Chiquita," "La Paloma," "Tu, Solo Tu" and "Zapateado." They're sung by Los Hermanos Huesca, El Trio Calaevras, and Hector Gonzalezy Carmen Rego.

You'll find the subtitles fully adequate.

The Plaza is holding its Grandma Moses short a second week, twinning it with a brief visit to another nonogenarian, Bernard Shaw, whom we see at the Ayot St. Lawrence Shaw Corners, with Neighbors Stephen and Clare Winsten and U. S. A. Visitor Danny Kaye; the two comedians play a special, minute scene for Winsten's movie camera.

SHOW TIMES at the art theaters, we've noticed, have a habit of running sadly awry, a habit, we hasten to assure you, over which your favorite newspaper has no control . . . Like you, this column has wasted packs of time to catch a picture from its beginning . . . While there seem to be managerial reasons for this, that's their business . . . The fact remains, show times for feature pictures, as published on this page, are the latest available from the theater at press time.

"A CHRISTMAS CAROL," by Charles Dickens, will be played this Friday night and Saturday afternoon by the Children's Theater of Washington, sponsored by the D. C. Recreation Department, which will repeat the same schedule the weekend of December 8-9 . . . Performances will be given at Roosevelt Auditorium, 13th and Allison sts. nw., seats now on sale at the Snow Concert Bureau, 1108 G st. and the recreation playgrounds . . . Mrs. George F. Prussing is directing and Denis Connell will do the narration.

ANOTHER CHILDREN'S production, already announced, is the Fairlington Players' offering "Racketty-Packetty House," by Frances Hodgson Burnett, to be presented Friday night at 7:30 and Saturday at 2 and 7:30 in the Charles T. Barrett School, Parkfairfax . . . This is the story of the inhabitants of two dollhouses and the little girls who own them . . . Sue Evans is directing and Ray Gehrt has produced . . . The cast of 24 includes Bob Mullen, Mimi Welch, Betty Johnson and Mary Lou Brown . . . Further information at OWens 2755.

FINAL WEEK starts for both "The Taming of the Shrew" at Arena Stage and Judy Holliday's "Born Yesterday" at the Gayety.

Ives To Aid in Rail Wreck Action

NYNT News Service

Sen. Irving M. Ives (R., N. Y.), yesterday said he was prepared to introduce whatever Federal legislation might be required to carry out recommendations to be made by the commission named by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey on Saturday to make the Long Island Railroad "safe" and "efficient."

In appointing the commission, Governor Dewey directed, among other things, that it report within 60 days on whether the railroad should be operated by a public authority. He asked the group to propose State and Federal legislation to rid the Long Island of the "present, multiple overlapping and conflicting control by local, State and Federal authorities."

Ives and officials of the Interstate Commerce Commission said a study would have to be made to determine exactly what Federal legislation would be needed if the Long Island were to be brought under public or semi-public management.

Fog Again Hugs Britain

LONDON, Nov. 26 (U.P.).— Fog — cold, wet and so thick that people could hardly see beyond their frost-nipped noses — hugged the British Isles today for the second straight day. Travelers by land, sea and air were stranded and Sunday drivers stayed home.

Redskins Beat Colts, 38-28; End Loss Streak at 8

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

GRIFFITH STADIUM, Nov. 26.—Twelfth place is at stake in the National Football League as the Washington Redskins take the field against the Baltimore Colts. If the importance of the contest doesn't leave the fans cold, this kind of weather will. Only 21,275 seat-buyers responded.

They are 10-point favorites, and it's a novel role for the Redskins who are trying to break an eight-game losing streak, and save Herman Ball's coaching job, assuming, of course, that he still wants it.

POVICH

7-0, Colts, with the game 2 minutes old. Abe Watner, president of the Colts, who made his fortune in cemetery lots, just dug up a real live one in Billy Stone, a halfback from Bradley Tech. Quarterback Y. A. Tittle handed Stone a football and he took it 72 yards through the middle of the Redskin line.

Stone was free 10 yards past the scrimmage line, and making a bee-line for the goal with a high knee-action gallop. The closest Redskin in pursuit was Harry Dowda who finally gave up the chase as a precaution against catching a bad Colt.

SAMMY BAUGH HANDS off to Charley Justice, and the Colts have a first down on the Redskins' 32. As the play unfolded, Justice tore around left end for a 15-yard gain and then, too smart to lateral and incur an automatic fine, he fumbled and Herb Rich recovered for the Colts.

THINGS ARE BETTER with the Redskins. They've just rediscovered Eddie Saenz, and he takes a 39-yard pass from Baugh to the Baltimore 1-yard line. Bob Goode bumps it within a hand's-breadth of the goal on the next play.

Touchdown, Redskins. Sammy Baugh, old swivel-hips, shows nice deception, a change of pace and plenty of leg drive to score through the middle on a gallop that covers 10 inches.

Paul Salata of the Colts succeeds in breaking up a pass thrown by Tittle of the Colts. On the play, the Colts' pass defense was better than their passing offense. It was a dismal pitch that Tittle aimed at Salata who barely knocked the ball down before Bill Dudley could intercept it.

Charley Justice grabs a pass from Sammy Baugh, breaks away, fumbles and then recovers the loose ball for the Redskins. Justice apparently is smartening up to the fact that he can't depend on the Redskins to recover his fumbles for him.

14-7, REDSKINS. Clyde Goodnight makes a nice catch of Baugh's high throw down the first base line and merely has to shake off two Colts to get the last 5 yards.

Adrian Burk punts the Colts out of danger with a 45-yard boot, but the referee signals a 5-yard penalty for backfield-in-motion on the play. It may sound funny, but that's what the man said.

17-7, Redskins. They just asked Bill Dudley to try a field goal from 33 yards out, and it was all right with him—and the referee.

Touchdown, Colts, and they are back in the ball game. Paul Salata faked the Messrs. Dowda and Haynes out of their mudcleats, latched onto a pass from Tittle and gaily skipped the rest of the 57 yards to the goal line.

CHARLIE JUSTICE takes matters into his own hands, including the ball, and gallops 42 yards up the middle to the Colts' 38. It was a herky-jerky sprint that left the Redskins' North Carolina fans breathless with excitement and Justice breathless.

24-14, Redskins. Apparently losing patience with Bob Goode who was gaining only 10 yards at a clip, Baugh unfurled a 21-yard pass to Goodnight for the touchdown.

31-14, Redskins, and Sammy Baugh is fouling up his own retirement plans. He pitches a 22-yard pass to Bones Taylor in the end zone, and is creating a new demand for his services in 1951.

Touchdown, Colts, and it will need some explaining. The goal line was 99 yards away when George Buksar grabbed a pass that Baugh had intended for Justice, and ran it back 18 yards. Tackled by Justice, he lateraled to Ernie Zalejski who took it the rest of the way.

38-21, Redskins. Dudley rips 22 yards around left end, Baugh pitches to Goodnight for 28 more, and Eddie Seanze picks up the last 13 on a whirl around left end, impeded only briefly by Bob Nowaskey who wound up empty-handed but with a mouthful of mud.

Touchdown, Colts. Tittle connects with Crisler in the end zone but with only 7 seconds to play they're a gone gang unless they can conjure up a nice 10-point scoring play on the next kick-off to the Redskins.

GOOD START, SAD FINISH—Washington's Charley Justice (22) gets off on a neat 15-yard advance from the Redskins' 19 in the first period of the Colts' game at Griffith Stadium yesterday. Hardy Brown (73) waves him on from a prone possition and Guard Cas Wituski (62) leads the interference. But Justice fumbled at the end of the gain and Baltimore's Herb Rich recovered. Washington recovered, too, and went on to a 38-28 win

Sam Baugh Tosses Three Touchdowns, Scores One

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

The Redskins finally won another football game yesterday, proving definitely they are a hot and cold team.

They snapped their eight-game losing streak by outpointing the Baltimore Colts, 38-28, in 28-degree weather at Griffith Stadium. Their only other victory this year was also over the Colts, accomplished by a 38-14 margin in 88-degree weather back in September.

Sammy Baugh was chiefly responsible for the defeat of the Colts, who now have lost nine of their 10 games. The 36-year-old passing star, returning to the lineup after an absence of two weeks, hurled three touchdown passes and scored one six-pointer himself.

Except for the last few seconds, when Rookie Nick Sebek took over, Baugh did all the Redskins' quarterbacking while Harry Gilmer, who hasn't completely recovered from a shoulder separation, rested on the bench.

Colts Score On 72, 99-Yard Play

Despite the sub-freezing weather, 21,275 watched the Futility Bowl contestants batile it out on a muddy field in horrible shape after being used for three games in less than 60 hours.

It was a good game between two not-so-good teams. Although the Redskins came up with the victory, the Colts came up with the two hottest plays of the frigid afternoon.

Less than three minutes after the game had started, Halfback Billy Stone ran 72 yards through the entire Redskins' team to give the Baltimoreans a 7-0 lead.

Late in the fourth quarter, Halfback Buksar highlighted a four-touchdown spree by intercepting a Baugh pass and lateralling to Ernie Zalejski to complete a 99-yard scoring play, the longest of the National Football League's 1950 season so far.

Baugh Outdoes Tittle

After Stone's long scoring run, the game resolved into a passing duel between Baugh and Baltimore's Y. A. Tittle with Baugh getting much the better of the argument. Sam completed 22 of the 35 sses he threw for 291 yards. Tittle, who played most of the game for the Colts, completed 17 of the 39 he attempted, including two for touchdowns.

Baugh tossed touchdown passes of 22 and 21 yards, respectively, to End Clyde Goodnight and completed the "hat trick" by hitting Bones Taylor with a 21-yarder for his third scoring aerial. It was Taylor's eighth touchdown of the season.

The other Redskin scores were produced by Baugh, who went over from one yard out on a quarterback sneak, by Eddie Saenz on a 12-yard run and by Bill Dudley, who booted a 33-yard field goal to give the Redskins a 17-7 half-time lead, and who also con-

Caps Succumb To Syracuse Again, 90-76

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 26.—The Washington Caps dropped their second National Basketball Association game in as many days to the Syracuse Nationals, 90-76, here tonight before 4641 spectators.

The Caps went into the lead at the end of the first quarter, 21-17. With Bones McKinney, Frank Kudelka and Ace Maughan hitting under-the-basket shots as the second quarter opened, Washington rolled to a 30-21 lead, its biggest of the game. But the Washington advantage was short-lived.

Bill Gabor and Dolph Schayes led a Syracuse drive late in the second quarter and the Nats grabbed a slim 43-40 advantage at halftime. Syracuse led the rest of the game.

Gabor lead a Syracuse drive in the second half that netted him a total of 22 points and high point honors for the evening. The Nats led at the end of the third quarter, 65-58.

The Caps tired badly in the fourth quarter and Syracuse outscored them, 25 points to 19, in the period. The defeat made Washington's record five victories against 10 losses.

Chick Halbert was high point man for Washington with 17 points. Maughan had 13. Don Otten and Kudelka scored 10 each.

Santa Clara Trips Loyola

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 26 (AP).—Halfback Johnny Pasco paced the Santa Clara Broncos to a 28 to 26 upset victory today over Loyola University of Los Angeles. Loyola had been unbeaten and untied this season.

Pasco set up the deciding touchdown with three minutes left to play, on a 40-yard pass. On the next play, Bob Vogel boomed over from five yards out for the clincher.

Santa Clara, winner of only two previous games this season, was a seven point underdog in the game at Gilmore Stadium. Loyola, ranked twentieth nationally in last week's Associated Press ratings, had been working on a 12-game winning streak which began after this same Santa Clara club won last year, 27-19.

Chicago Halts Los Angeles' String at Six

CHICAGO, Nov. 26 (AP).—The ferocious Chicago Bears, playing their best game of the season, scored in every period to dump the Los Angeles Rams, 24-14, today and replace their West Coast rivals atop the National Football League's National Division.

The triumph, posted in 33-degree weather and before 43,478 snowball throwing fans in Wrigley Field, snapped the Rams' six-game victory string and shoved the Bears a half game ahead with an 8-2 record. The Rams dropped to the National's second place with 8-3.

The Bears have two more games to play, with the Chicago Cardinals and Detroit Lions, before they can claim the National Division championship. Los Angeles, however, was the big hurdle.

Los Angeles punched all its points in the last quarter to avoid a whitewashing job and picked up enough aerial yardage to set an all-time National League passing mark for the season.

Bob Waterfield and Norm Van Brocklin accounted for 263 aerial yards. That boosted the Rams' mark through 11 league games to 3358, compared to the league record of 3325 by Washington in 1947.

The Rams, who had averaged more than 40 points per contest, were stopped cold on the ground by the Bears' great line. Los Angeles picked up only 67 yards rushing, and had a minus-9 showing in the first half.

The Bears, guided competently by Johnny Lujack, lumbered 188 yards on the ground and 174 more through the air.

Waterfield's sensational passing to Dick Hoerner drove the Rams 68 yards the first time they took the ball as the game started. The SCRANTON, Nov. 26 (AP).—Niagara College's Eagles upset Scranton College's Royals, 12-0, today. Scranton had been unbeaten this year in college competition, losing only to the Quantico Marines. The game was postponed from Saturday because of the big storm.

The Eagles won the game largely on the fine passing of John Theobold. He passed 23 yards in the first quarter to End Dan O'Connor for a touchdown and set up the other score with a 37-yard toss to Dick Wojciechowski.

Giants Defeat Eagles, 7 to 3, Tie for Lead

By John Chandler

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (AP).—A battling, bruising New York line made three gallant goal-line stands, and made a first-period touchdown stand up to beat the Philadelphia Eagles, 7 to 3, and send the Giants into a first-place tie with idle Cleveland in the National Football League's American Division.

The Giants' victory, on a muddy Polo Grounds field before 24,093 well chilled fans, all but eliminated the Eagles—defending league champions—from the 1950 title race. It was the first time since 1942 that the Eagles had been held without a touchdown.

New York, trailing in the opening quarter after Cliff Patton's 24-yard field goal for three points, came right back to put over the winning touchdown.

Randall Clay, rookie from Texas, was the star in the winning touchdown drive which traveled 80 yards in four devastating plays.

Culmone, Shoemaker Clash in 9 Races Today

Better Mounts Give Slight Edge To Sicilian Who Leads, 344-341

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Willie Shoemaker and Joe Culmone are ready to disprove Rudyard Kipling's "East is East and West is West and never the 'twain shall meet".

If everything goes according to Hoyle, they will meet nine times today at Bowie when the struggle for the 1950 jockey championship, a sort of remote control affair heretofore, becomes a head-and-head test.

Like the United States mail that goes through despite disaster, pestilence and flood, Shoemaker and Culmone clash regardless of uncertainty, prejudice and blizzard.

The "Saddle Battle of a Century", akin to a command performance in a monarchy, is booked today at the nearby Prince Georges County track and had the turf fans sitting on the edge of their old Racing Forms.

Yes, it's head-on today for Culmone and Shoemaker, starting at 1 o'clock with the score, 344 to 341—Culmone, as the diminutve giants brave the jockeys' room for their first mounts.

While the chief objective of the two 19-year-olds is the number of winners, the day's feature, likely to become a yearly affair, is the Bowie Special by invitation. This race, to be staged between the seventh and eighth events on the regular program, is a non-betting event, officially that is.

The Maryland Racing Commission refused permission for betting on the outcome, despite the fact the proceeds are slated to go to a polio- stricken son of a former jockey. However, the race packs much interest.

It's at a mile and a half, with Curruhuinca and Chiloe 2nd, a pair of Argentine-breds matched. The rival riders will flip a coin for the choice of mounts. Weights are even at 112 pounds with Culmone likely to make the weight in person, plus warm clothing, while Shoemaker, at 98 pounds, probably will pack lead in his saddlebag.

With no betting, the race isn't big, financially speaking. The purse is $1250 to the winner. However, it is as important to the boys and the fans as a $100,000 handicap.

The winning rider will receive a trophy from the Maryland

Green Bay Rallies in Snowstorm to Overcome Forty-Niners, 25-21

His Kick Beat Hoyas

GW's Shullenbarger Wins Week's Honors

JOHN SHULLENBARGER is The Washington Post's and Touchdown Club's College Player of the Week, and he makes it just in time. He played his last game for George Washington Saturday.

His parting contributions were an extra point which gave the Colonials a mud-soaked 7-6 victory over Georgetown, and 15 punts for a 38-yard average.

John Shullenbarger

Good punting is an old story for "Shully." Even back in his Coolidge High days, he could boot the ball a mile. And only last year against Lafayette, on a muddy field similar to Saturday's, he kicked 22 times for a 39-yard average.

But kicking extra points, that's relatively new for John. Only when Frankie Cavallo's former placekicking expert graduated last June did he decide to learn the art.

He already had a natural free swinging motion with his kicking foot, so a little instruction from Cavallo and practice and more practice made it easy for him.

He took over this season, and made 17 out of 20 before the big one against the Hoyas.

It's ironic that such a talented kicker should have a bad foot, his left one. When he was 10 years old, he broke his left foot during a sandlot baseball game. Four small bones were removed.

He took a lot of running exercises to help in the healing process, but he never was very fleet-footed. He was a top passer and kicker at Coolidge High, and in 1946, he did most of GW's punting and passing.

In 1947, he dropped out of school, and in '48, he came back. However, his duties were limited to punting because a bright young prospect named Andy Davis had made an impression on Coach Bo Rowland.

Except for an occasional surprise pass from punt formation, Shully has stuck to kicking ever since.

Shully has been married for four years, and has two children.

Packers Win On Late Pass By Christman

GREEN BAY, Wis., Nov. 26 (AP).—Green Bay snowplowed to a pair of last-quarter touchdowns and a 25-21 victory over San Francisco today before 13,196 fans in windswept, frigid City Stadium.

A bitter northwest wind swept the field which was covered by snow, as the Packers closed out their home schedule. Snow, which started falling last night, continued throughout the game with the temperature about 20 degrees.

San Francisco, with Frankie Albert at the throttle all the way, pulled into an 8-point lead in the third period, but the Packers refused to quit and cashed a pair of tallies in the waning minutes to rack up their third victory in 10 National Football League games. The loss was the Forty-Niners eighth in 11 starts.

The payoff touchdown came on a 44-yard pass play form Paul Christman to Floyd (Breezy) Peid with 3 minutes left to play. Reid took the pitch on the Frisco 15-yard line and skidded into the end zone.

San Francisco jumped off to a touchdown in the first quarter on a short smash through the middle by Johnny Strzykalski and the first of three conversions by Gordon Soltau but the Packers tied it up with only seconds emaining of the period on a 57-yard skidding run around end by Billy Grimes. Ted Fritsch made his only conversion of the game.

Green Bay took the lead with two seconds of the half showing when Rote hit Al Baldwin with a 48-yard pass and Tony Canadeo crashed center to leave it at 13-7 at the half.

Two breaks led to Frisco's other scores early in the third period. Grimes fumbled the opening kickoff and Harvey Dow recovered on the Packer 23. On the seventh play, Fred Gehrke slithered through the middle. Minutes later, Hal Shoener stole the ball out of Rote's hand as he faded to pass on the Packer 30. A pass, Albert to Emil Sitko, on the eighth play, rang the bell and Frisco led, 21-13. The Packers' winning touchdown came in the final six minutes of the game. A poor punt by Albert gave them possession on their own 14 and Reid went over in four plays. Three minutes later, with Christman replacing Rote, the long pass to Reid paid off.

DON'T KICK HIM, BILL.—Bill Dudley (35) of the Redskins appears ready to kick Rip Collins of the Baltimore Colts right in the seat of his pants after Collins caught an 18-yard pass in the second quarter against the Redskins yesterday. Bill didn't. The Redskins won, 38-28, clinching the championship of Baltimore.

verted after all five Washington touchdowns.

Tittle passed to End Paul Salata for a 57-yard score and also flipped to Hal Crisler, former Redskins end, for a nine-yard TD.

Crisler was the only one of the four former Redskins on the Colts to accomplish much against his old team. One, Frankie Filchock, didn't even play, while the other two, Frankie Spaniel and Hardy Brown, did little more than get their names in the lineups.

The Redskins turned what was a close ball game into somewhat of a rout late in the third period, when they were leading by only 3 points, 17-14.

They moved 86 yards for a touchdown in five plays and from then on called their shots pretty much the rest of the way. Charlie Justice, who committed his usual fumble a game gave the scoring movement the impetus it needed by racing 42 yards to the Colts' 38-yard line.

After Bob Goode had made a first down on the Baltimore 21 two plays later, Baugh hit Goodnight in the end zone with a touchdown pass to make it Washington 24, Baltimore 14, two minutes before the period ended.

Four minutes later the Redskins scored again to run their lead to 31-14, their biggest margin of the day.

This one was a 56-yard excursion accomplished in five plays. Chuck Drazenovich, who is fast becoming the best power runner the Redskins own, bulled his way for 33 yards to the Colts' 29 and two plays later Baugh flipped a 22-yard pass to Taylor for the score.

The Redskins were driving for still another touchdown four minutes later when the Colts came up with their 99-yard scoring play. They had the ball on the Baltimore 6-yard line where it was second and 3 yards to go for a first down.

Baugh's pass, intended for Justice, wound up in the arms of Buksar on the 1-yard line. The 200-pound former Purdue and Chicago Hornets star raced to the 18-yard line before Choo-Choo slowed him down.

Just before falling, he lateralled to Zalejski who went the remaining 81 yards down the sidelines for the thrilling score. Guard Herb Siegert had a shot at the former Notre Damer on the Redskins' 30 but missed him.

With less than a minute left to play, Tittle launched a steady passing attack which moved the Colts 67 yards to a touchdown, a 9-yard Tittle to Crisler pass in the end zone culminating the movement.

Stone's 72-yard scoring dash came on the fifth play of the game. The one-time Bradley back ramed through the Redskins' right tackle where he was slowed down a step but he eluded two would-be tacklers, cut to his right and 5 yards later was completely in the clear.

Harry Dowda pursued him to the Colts' 20-yard line, but apparently seeing he was losing ground, Dowda gave up the chase.

Veto Kissell came in to add the extra point and give the Colts a lead that lasted until early in the second period when Baugh ended a 40-yard march by sneaking over for the tieing touchdown.

Two minutes before halftime, the Redskins moved in front, 14-7, as Baugh and Goodnight hooked up in their first of their scoring plays. Just as the halftime gun sounded, Dudley kicked his 33-yard field goal.

Full of hustle, the mud-splattered Colts got back into the thick of the skirmish in the first minute of the third quarter when Paul Salata gave Dowda the slip and gathered in a lazy pass from Tittle for a 57-yard touchdown play to narrow the count to 17-14, Redskins.

It remained at that count until late in the period when Baugh and Goodnight collaborated on their second TD play to pull the Redskins away.

Ah, victory!

DEAR FOLKS: AT BOWIE

I guess we will have to hand it to this frack for going through with the Shoemaker-Culmone clash. Seldom in racing history has one plant gotten so much publicity so quickly. On the phone the other night, my friends in the Hollywood Park press box told me Bowie was getting more radio and newspaper play out there than Hollywood Park. Incidentally, the California turf scribes, to a man, were in favor of Shoemaker's trip from the start. They also would like to see Culmone come out there for a visit. Big stuff. I'm going to try to match Palumbo and Root at Charles Town. See you on the rail; wear your woolen socks. BILL.

Culmone, Shoemaker Clash Today

Racing Writers Association, which played a major part in matching the rivals. The track management is giving both boys gold watches as souvenirs.

For the nine-race card, Culmone was a slight favorite last night, due to a slight edge in probable mounts. The line-up for the rivals, subject to revision, is as follows:

First Race—Culmone, Mary Ann; Shoemaker, Sun Elsie.
Second Race—Culmone, Cock Feather; Shoemaker, Dawty.
Third Race—Culmone, Red Swing; Shoemaker, High Count.
Fourth Race—Culmone, Rocky Heights; Shoemaker, Agraarian-U.
Fifth Race—Culmone, Steadfast; Shoemaker, Mully S.
Sixth Race—Culmone, Sunglow; Shoemaker, Adopt.
Seventh Race—Culmone, Blue Hills; Shoemaker, Colonel Mike.
Eighth Race—Culmone, Beret; Shoemaker, Loyal Worker.

Shoemaker arrived at Washington's Shoreham Hotel shortly before noon yesterday.

Asked how he liked the cold weather, Shoemaker said, "I have had only a few breaths of fresh air since I left California. It was warm in the plane. There was a heater in the car that brought me to the hotel, and I haven't been outside since."

CULMONE and Shoemaker were a study in opposites when they met. The Sicilian boy was cocky and rather talkative, as usual, and West Coast Willie, as quiet as the proverbial mouse.

Both were very cooperative when asked to pose for pictures. They faced a battery of cameramen for more than a half-hour, showing they were adept at taking orders both at a social gathering and in the paddock.

Shoemaker and his agent, Harry Silbert, who accompanied the boy from the West Coast, were pleased with their reception and also with the mounts lined up for them by Frenchy Bowen, who was assigned the task. Both said they were in good condition.

Bums Won't Talk About Dressen

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (AP).—Walter O'Malley, president of the Brooklyn Dodgers, said tonight he had "nothing to say" regarding reports that Charley Dressen will be named manager of the Dodgers.

Dressen, a former manager at Cincinnati and one-time Brooklyn coach, managed Oakland of the Pacific Coast League the past season.

O'Malley said announcement of the Brooklyn manager will be made "at the proper time." A Brooklyn press conference has tentatively been set for Tuesday.

Bears Whip Rams, 24-14, Go Into First

parade ended on the Bear two when George McAfee recovered Tom Fear's fumble.

From then until the last period, the Rams never penetrated beyond the Bear 44. Chicago piled up a 10-0 halftime margin and was ahead 24-0 before the Rams opened up with two touchdowns in five minutes.

Van Brocklin's 28-yard pass to Hoerner touched off a 74-yard surge. Brocklin counted with an 8-yard toss to tackle Ed Champagne on a tackle-eligible play that fooled the Bears.

Jack Finlay's recovery of George Gulyanic's bobble on the Bear 42 set up the second Ram tally. Hoerner eventually drilled over from the three, and Waterfield added his second successive conversion.

At 11:58 of the first quarter, the Bears punched their first touchdown after Bill Wightkin pounced on Waterfield's fumble on the Ram 5. It took four plays to get over, Julie Rykovich scoring from inches out and Lujack booting the first of three extra points.

Lujack kicked a 12-yard field goal in the second, and later the Bears slammed 69 yards to the Los Angeles 2 before being stopped.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 26 (AP).—Promoter Sam Becker announced tonight that the 15-round title match between Heavyweight Champion Ezzard Charles and Nick Barone of Syracuse, N. Y., will go on Tuesday night, as originally scheduled.

It had been rumored at first that the fight would be postponed to December 5 because of the snowstorm at Cincinnati. The weather made it uncertain as to how many fans would brave the 9-mile trip to the Cincinnati Garden.

Giants Defeat Eagles, 7 to 3, Tie for Lead

McChesney to start him away on his brilliant romp.

Gene Roberts picked up six yards, Clay chipped in for two more. Then Clay tucked the ball under his arm and boomed around right end again as Philadelphia defenders were strewn on the damp sod, and hiked the remaining 16 yards into the end zone.

So were the Giants as far as offense was concerned, but it was enough.

The result left the Giants and Cleveland Browns deadlocked for first place, each with eight victories and two defeats. The Eagles, with six wins and three losses going into the game, thus missed a chance to tie for second place. Next week the Eagles invade Cleveland, while the Giants meet the New York Yanks here.

New York's touchdown came with two minutes and one second left in the first period, and the game was all Philadelphia from then on as far as offensive gestures went. But the Giants' line wouldn't budge when the chips were down.

In the second quarter, Bill Mackrides sparked an Eagle 57-yard drive to the New York 5, where he was held inches short of a first down.

Oklahoma, Army, Princeton, Wyoming Have Perfect Records

Upset Year Takes Toll Of Others

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (AP).—College football is nearing the trails' end—except, of course, for Saturday's glamorous Army-Navy game—and it seems the only thing certain about the New Year's bowl games is that they'll be played on January 1.

It's been that kind of season—zany, unpredictable, thrilling, almost fantastic and downright stubborn.

After the latest round of upsets, only four major teams remained with perfect slates.

Unbeaten and untied are Oklahoma, Army, Princeton and Wyoming. The last named two have finished their seasons.

Texas and Tennessee are in the Cotton Bowl at Dallas and Kentucky is in the New Orleans' Sugar Bowl. Nothing else is definite.

So if the much-abused Midshipmen up and blast Army's 28-game undefeated string, don't be too surprised. The star-spangled classic, scheduled for Philadelphia's gigantic Municipal Stadium, could be the perfect kicker to this crazy season, which has seen the No. 1 position juggled like a hot potato.

Bud Wilkinson's Oklahoma Sooners finally seem to have nailed the elusive biscuit. They whipped Nebraska, 49-35, Saturday and now only Oklahoma A. and M. stands in their way to a Sugar Bowl bid.

That is, if the Sooners, winners of 30 straight—football's longest winning string—want it. They've said no decision will be reached until after the A. and M. tussle.

Michigan wrapped up the Western Conference title by upsetting Ohio State, 9-3, on a snow-covered, storm-swept Columbus gridiron, while Illinois fell before Northwestern's fired-up Wildcats, 14-7, at near-zero Evanston.

The freak weather at these two cities were not exceptions Saturday, but, rather, the rule especially throughout the Eastern part of the United States.

Cotton at Dallas—Texas vs. Tennessee.

Orange at Miami—Miami vs. Clemson, Wyoming, Alabama or Fordham.

'Gator at Jacksonville—Several of the above teams in the running.

SPENCER LAMPIRIS

Spencer Lampiris

A ONE-MAN goal-line stand by Eastern's Spencer Lampiris Friday night helped win the Interhigh championship for Eastern and The Washington Post and Touchdown Club High School Player of the Week award for Lampiris.

Late in the second quarter, when the score was tied, 6-6, McKinley Tech marched to Eastern's 14-yard line and threatened to walk off at intermission with a one-touchdown lead.

The Trainers, though, hadn't reckoned with Lampiris, and the 165-pound center, barged through the middle of Tech's fast line and made three straight tackles that helped stop Tech and move the Ramblers on the road to their 20-6 triumph.

Spencer, a junior who was a second-string boy last year, loves to play football and a conversation with him reveals that he is strictly a team man.

Spencer, who is looking for a part-time job to help pay his way through college when he goes, says about the victory: "I'm glad for the whole team. I liked the way they handled themselves after their slow first quarter start. Our coach, Dick Mentzer, gave us a great talk at halftime and really pepped us up."

Spencer played all but the last 3 minutes Friday night and his performance probably pepped up the other boys as much as Mentzer's halftime speech.

BOB STIMAC
BULLIS PREP

Bob Stimac

BOB STIMAC, The Washington Post and Touchdown Club's Prep School Player of the Week, is a football veteran at the age of 18. Bob, Prep's split-T quarterback, is playing his seventh year of football.

Stimac is from Barberton, Ohio. Out that way, they start them early with competitive football beginning in the seventh grade so that by the time a kid reaches his senior year in high school, he has usually played six years of football.

Bob's experience was evident in the Little Admirals' 25-19 loss to the Navy Plebes on Thanksgiving Day. Playing in Annapolis, where he hopes to take his scholastic and athletic abilities next year, Bob's ball handling was the major factor in Bullis' 170 yards gained on the ground. He also completed 9 of 17 passes for 160 yards and did all the punting.

Bob plays basketball and baseball, too, but thinks he'll lay off basketball this season. He wants to devote more time to the books in preparation for taking the Naval Academy entrance exam in April. Bob's admittance naturally would gratify him and his family. It would probably please the Navy athletic staff, too.

Eastern Has Nucleus for Repeat in '51

By Bill Gilbert

Eastern's Ramblers, Interhigh League champions by virtue of their 20-6 triumph over McKinley Tech Friday, stand a good chance of playing in the title game again in 1951.

Coach Dick Mentzer will have a sizeable nucleus around which to build his '51 squad. Two of the boys who carried most of the load in the backfield this year, Quarterback Tom McHan and Halfback Ralph Sita, will be back next season.

McHan's deft ball-handling was largely responsible for the Ramblers' triumph, and Sita, a dangerous runner and better than average passer, was a big ground gainer.

Eastern's two crack ends, Bill Hunter and Richie Ward, will be back, as will Center Spencer Lampiris, Guard Phil Mulrenin, Tackles Bob Murray and Guard Jerry Murphy.

NOTES — Eastern's victory came in the form of an anniversary present to its principal, John Paul Collins . . . Collins and his wife observed their twenty-seventh wedding anniversary yesterday . . . Eastern will salute its heroes at a general assembly this morning . . . . Head Coach Dick Mentzer and Assistant Coach Sherman Reese will present the team to the student body . . . Classes as usual, though . . . Hardy Pearce, head of public school athletics in the District, and Johnny Morrisey, Griffith Stadium's ticket man, will meet at the ball park today to compute the net proceeds from Friday's game which will go to the athletic funds of the schools.

Coaches Pick 4

Illini Lead Big 10 Stars

CHICAGO, Nov. 26 (AP)—Illinois landed four players and Ohio State and Michigan three apiece to monopolize the 1950 All-Big Ten football tea selected for the Associated Press by conference coaches.

Balloting was unusually close. Don Stonesifer, Northwestern end who broke three league pass-catching records, was the only unanimous choice. He was given a first team nod by every coach, amassing the maximum 18 points (on a basis of two points for first and one for second.)

Versatile Vic Janowicz, the passing-running-punting sensation for Ohio State, collected 17 points. He was shifted from halfback to quarterback on the All-Star lineup, a position he could easily fit.

FIRST TEAM
ENDS: Don Stonesifer, Northwestern, and Tony Klimek, Illinois.
TACKLES: Bill Trautwein, Ohio State, and Allen Wahl, Michigan.
GUARDS: John Bills, Ohio State, and Charles Brown, Illinois.
CENTER: Bill Vohaska, Illinois.
QUARTERBACK: Vic Janowicz, Ohio State.

Do Not Misrepresent Senator Taft's Victory

(An open letter to some Republican Senators)

SENATOR CHARLES W. TOBEY
SENATOR ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Senators:

As members of the liberal, progressive, international-minded wing of the Republican Party, you must have noted with some concern the interpretations being placed on the outcome of the senatorial race in Ohio, where Senator Robert A. Taft was re-elected by a record-breaking majority.

The returns had hardly been tabulated before Senator Taft was saying, among other things, that the people of Ohio "have expressed their lack of confidence in his (President Truman's) foreign policy and the State Department" — before Washington commentators were saying that the administration's whole program for containing Communist aggression may be revised—before Republican National Committeemen were saying that Senator Taft, having demonstrated tremendous voter appeal, is the leading contender for the Republican presidential nomination in 1952.

The people of Ohio were not unaware that a Taft victory might have these consequences, which many of them consider unfortunate. That is why thousands upon thousands of our citizens who voted for Senator Taft, with considerable reluctance, hoped that he would squeak through by the narrowest of margins.

Now they are afraid that the rest of the nation, remembering only the 430,000-vote majority by which Senator Taft won his victory and ignoring the circumstances under which it was achieved, will read much more into it than the voters of Ohio meant.

To prevent this misunderstanding, The Toledo Blade, which supported Senator Taft with the same misgiving, is acquainting you with the facts of the situation. As liberal Republican members of the Senate you should know that the administration's foreign policy was not repudiated in this state on November 7, that McCarthyism is not rampant in Ohio, and that Senator Taft is not our "favorite son" in any presidential sense.

* * * *

Even in carrying Ohio by some 400,000 votes, Senator Taft did not get a "mandate" from its people because, due to circumstances over which he had no control, they didn't have a chance to vote on any of the issues which he tried to raise except the overriding one of political domination by the labor bosses.

People in other states, of course, are familiar with candidates who duck controversial issues. With "Jumping Joe" Ferguson aspiring to a Senate seat, however, the people of Ohio were treated to the unique spectacle of a politician who had got out so far beyond his depth that he couldn't recognize an issue if he saw one. He not only didn't debate Senator Taft during the course of the whole campaign; he couldn't even understand the speeches which were written for him.

Under these circumstances, how could the voters of Ohio possibly have expressed any opinion, pro or con, on the administration's foreign policies?

Asked for his views about Formosa, "Jumping Joe" is reputed to have made the remark which has become a campaign classic: "Sure, I'll carry it easy." But there is nothing apocryphal at all about his action as state auditor in holding up the fees of some Chicago experts who had made a survey for the state of Ohio, on the grounds that "outside experts" have no business working in this state. Senator Taft may or may not have lost some of his isolationism; "Jumping Joe" will always consider the people of neighboring Illinois slightly foreign.

Or how could the voters of Ohio possibly have expressed any opinion, pro or con, on the administration's domestic program?

Asked for his views on the Brannan plan, "Jumping Joe" is reported to have said in all simplicity and sincerity, "I am for what the farmers want." He was just as simple, if not as sincere, in answering questions about any of the nation's other problems. He was for anything any groups of voters wanted, no matter how irreconcilable, impossible, or absurd their wishes might be, because he wanted to go to Washington.

And so when Senator Taft asserts that the election results in Ohio show that our citizens prefer his stand on public issues, foreign and domestic, to that of "Jumping Joe," he is talking about issues that never arose. As far as issues were concerned, Senator Taft simply won the election by default.

* * * *

Perhaps the best way of explaining that Senator Taft's victory was not as clear-cut as it may appear to the rest of the nation is to point out that in the same election the voters of this Ninth (Toledo) Congressional District helped elect a Republican to the Senate and a Democrat as Governor while they were sending an Independent to the House of Representatives.

Here the only issue, as far as the Congressional races were concerned, was the issue of political domination by the labor bosses. Pounding away on that theme, the Independent candidate for Congress, Frazier Reams, defeated both the incumbent Democrat, the only CIO official to hold a seat in the present Congress, and his Republican predecessor.

Inasmuch as that was the only issue of the Taft-Ferguson contest as well, Senator Taft naturally benefited from the torrid nature of the local fight. Theoretically, every vote which the Independent candidate and the Republican candidate for Congress could win away from the CIO candidate should have gone to him. But Senator Taft's vote lagged far behind their combined total. While they were piling up 86,972 votes between them against 42,685 for the CIO candidate, Senator Taft was getting only 72,238 votes against "Jumping Joe's" 57,026.

These figures, which should be sufficient to dispel the notion that Senator Taft has suddenly developed terrific voter appeal, were not at all surprising in view of his previous showings in this District. Two years ago when Harold E. Stassen invaded this state to compete with Senator Taft for presidential delegates, our senior Senator couldn't even win in a Republican primary here with the aid of the Republican organization. He probably wouldn't have done any better this year except for the changed circumstances of the contest, which made political domination by the labor bosses the sole issue.

Running against a nonentity, a straw man for the PAC, he carried this District in just about the same proportion with which he carried the state. But in doing so he had the sympathy of thousands of people who resented the viciously unfair attacks against him. And he had the support of thousands of people who, despite the fact that they disagree with Senator Taft, could not in good conscience vote to give his Senate seat to a professional ignoramus.

Never were more votes cast for any candidate with less enthusiasm and greater reservations.

Thus, it seems to us, you liberal Republican Senators can render a considerable service to the party and to the nation if you do not let the results of our election be misinterpreted — if you bear in mind that the administration's foreign policy has not been repudiated in this state, that McCarthyism is not rampant in Ohio, and that Senator Taft is not our "favorite son" in any presidential sense.

Sincerely yours,

'Lame Duck' Session Expected to Get Bills For U. S. Pay Boosts

Half a dozen bills to boost the salaries of Federal workers will be introduced in the "Lame-Duck" session of Congress that convenes today.

Most of them will propose a flat increase of $630 annually for each classified and postal employe, and a percentage boost for per diem employes. The four lower postal grades also would be abolished under the bills that have been drafted.

The AFL employe union, through its potent Government Employes Council, is spearheading the drive for a big increase in Federal pay. A big bloc of congressional members, Democrats and Republicans alike, has been asked to sponsor the AFL pay bill.

If he does it at all, Chairman Johnston of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee will introduce it "by request." He feels that the bill demands the impossible; that the Government workers will be fortunate to get an average pay boost of $300. On the House side, Chairman Murray of its Post Office and Civil Service Committee definitely won't sponsor the AFL bill. He'll wait and see what the Senate does on the pay issue.

Several members of the House committee, such as Rhodes (D., Pa.) and Buckley (D., Ill.), are likely sponsors of the AFL bill.

Several other employe organizations have drafted pay-raise bills which they hope to persuade key members of Congress to sponsor.

The "lame-duck" session won't approve any general pay-raise legislation, and don't you count on it. The employe groups, however, want to get the pay-raise ball rolling now, so they will have a running start when the new Congress convenes in January.

RFC: The Reconstruction Finance Corp. has given out lay-off and downgrading notices to several hundred employes and more of them are in the mill. The agency is making a strenuous effortz to find other jobs for its surplus people—either by transfer to other Federal agencies or in private industry.

NOTES: G. Lyle Belsley will join the National Production Administration to head up its business advisory committee. He's assistant administrator of Federal Security and formerly a top official in the War Production Board. . . . Lieut. Ruth V. Schmidt today will take over as information officer of the Naval Ordnance Laboratory at nearby White Oak, Md. . . . Earl Byram of Civil Service, is helping the new Subversive Control Board get set up for business. . . . Albert B. Ray, an employe of Navy's Bureau of Ships, wears the distinguished civilian service award for solving many logistics and personnel problems. Cash awards for worthy suggestions have been given these bureau employes: Anna J. Ashcom, Eva C. Kraus, John A. Weber, and Nicholas B. Michel. . . . Lawrence J. Wainwright is odds-on favorite to be elected national vice president of the AFL's American Federation of Government Employes.

HIGHER: Federal employment in the executive branch here during October showed an increase of 3400 to reach an over-all total of 222,200, the largest single increase in any month for several years. Nation-wide, the increase was 34,000 to a total of 2,128,500 civilian employes. As expected, the Army, Navy and Air Force reported the largest increases both here and nationally.

JOB NEWS: Civil Service will open tests in about two weeks for junior agricultural assistants, $3100 to start; occupational analysts, informational specialists, and engineers, all to pay $3825 to $6400 to start. Information jobs are open in State's Voice of America offices in New York City. All branches of engineering will be covered in the new engineer test.

At nearby Fort Meade, Md., exams are open for building-laborer, $1.09 an hour; sheet metal worker, $1.49; plumber, $1.42; steamfitter, $1.49, and laundry worker, 86 to 95 cents an hour. . . At the Naval Powder Factory, Indian Head, Md., these tests are open: Blacksmith $1.51 an hour; boilermaker, $1.54; laborer-cleaner, 88 cents; laborer, 98 cents; carpenter, $1.48; pipefitter, $1.54, and powder and explosive worker, $1 an hour.

Top 1950 Chest Total By Tuesday, Aides Urged

$3,357,000 Goal, 'Crisis Point' Of Campaign, Chairman Says

"Top the $3,357,000 collected in the Community Chest campaign last year by Tuesday's general report meeting," Chairman Hugh K. Duffield urged Red Feather keymen yesterday.

Once this "crisis" point is passed, he said, further plans for the final effort to meet the 1951 quota of $4,266,000 will be announced; 71 percent or $3,042,000 has been booked to date.

On Tuesday, four simultaneous report luncheons will be held in the Washington and Willard Hotels at 12:20 p. m.

Senator Margaret Chase Smith (R., Maine) will address workers in the Special Solicitation unit in the Hall of Nations, Washington Hotel. Mrs. Harold Hitz Burton, chairman, will preside.

Washington columnist Doris Fleeson will speak at the Government Unit luncheon in the hotel's Mural Room. Army Secretary Frank Pace, jr., secretary of the Army, will present Red Feather "Oscars" to seven Treasury Department workers.

Zone "C" day will be observed at the Business-Employe Unit I luncheon in the Monroe Room, Willard Hotel. Zone Chairman Joseph S. Baldwin will award several "Oscars."

All leaders in Business I have been challenged by Chairman John S. Hayes to bring in total subscriptions topping last year's $1,240,000. Only $140,000 from 105 unreported firms is needed.

Workers from Alexandria and the four adjoining counties in Virginia and Maryland will make their reports at the Business I luncheon.

Business-Employes Unit II will convene in the Willard's Fairfax Room with Chairman Richard K. Lyon presiding.

A television set donated by Kann Sons Co. will be the door prize for Red Feather workers who attend both November 28 and December 1-report luncheons.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Stein, of 504 Bonifant st., Silver Spring, observed their golden wedding anniversary yesterday at the Takoma Lutheran Church, which they have attended regularly since it opened in 1924.

The Rev. J. Adrian Pfeiffer, pastor, preached a sermon, "God Never Forgets to Bless," in honor of the Steins. The entire Stein family has been active in the work of the church many years.

Mr. Stein was president of the congregation in 1933 and served on the vestry from 1930 to 1935. His son, Milford, is superintendent of the Sunday School and secretary pro-tem of the vestry and congregation.

The Stein family and friends gathered yesterday afternoon at a party for the couple at the home of their son, Carl F. Stein, 10313 Parkman rd., Hillandale, Md.

Mr. and Mrs. Stein are both natives of Washington. He has been in the clothing business here for 55 years.

Congress' Approval Sought on Dispersal, Decentralization

Request for Funds Planned in January; Year's Delay Noted

Congress will be asked, probably next week, to vote legislative sanction for both dispersal and decentralization of the Government but the request for funds to carry out the plans will wait for the new Congress in January.

Last September President Truman asked for but did not get nearly 140 million dollars to construct four new Government centers in nearby Maryland and Virginia, each to have two buildings with offices for 5000 workers.

At that time, General Services Administrator Jess Larson told Congress authority existed for such a program and only the money was needed. Now signals have been switched and legislative sanction will be asked first, although Larson still feels, he said yesterday, that authority is already on the books.

One reason for the change was the demand in September, especially from Representative John Taber (R., N. Y.), ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee, that authorization be voted before any appropriation.

The new approach will mean, at best, that no money can become available until March or April, assuming authority is voted by the lame-duck session and a supplemental appropriation is approved early in the new Congress.

"We will have lost almost a year over the original plan this way," Larson said. He estimated it would take from 18 to 20 months after the money is voted to choose the sites and construct the buildings. There have been no changes in the plans for the buildings since September, Larson said.

Also, he said, the plan still is to select four sites, two in Maryland and two in Virginia. A total of 40,000 workers would be accommodated. Congress will be asked to vote general authorization for such sites so that more could be added later.

In addition to the dispersal plan, originated by the National Security Resources Board as the "Plan for the Defense of the Nation's Capital" in the face of a possible atomic attack, planners also are working on decentralization. The idea here—and it is not very far along—would be to move out permanently a small number of agencies which could function just as well in other cities. The bill to be sent Congress next week would include power to move such agencies without naming them.

In reconsidering the dispersal program, two changes of importance have been made, Larson said. They are:

1. The location of the four sites probably will be from 15 to 20 air miles from the White House instead of from 20 to 25 miles as planned in September. NSRB originally suggested going out 40 or 50 miles. The 5-mile difference would make Government business easier to conduct without increasing the possibility of a single bomb wiping out any two sites or the downtown Government area and any one site, it is felt.

2. Instead of moving the top echelon of key agencies to the new Government centers, the plan now is to set up what would amount to a "standby organization" for a department or agency, built around a cadre of personnel qualified to carry on if the main office were destroyed. Thus the Secretary of State probably would remain downtown but the Undersecretary and a staff would move to the country, ready to take over the department in an emergency. But the dispersed workers also would have day-to-day jobs in the department before the bombs fall.

Larson and Budget Bureau officials said that a study is now under way on just how many such groups should be dispersed if the business of Government is to continue after an attack on Washington. The date the legislation goes to Congress will depend on the finishing of the report.

In some cases an entire agency may be moved out of the concentrated downtown area—the FBI, Central Intelligence and the Atomic Energy Commission are candidates.

Larson said plans still call for rooms in at least one of the four dispersal centers big enough to house Congress, should it have to leave the city.

The GSA boss said that studies already are under way in cooperation with the National Capital Park and Planning Commission to fit the original four sites (and a potential 10 or even more) into the recently published master plan for the metropolitan area. Larson said each site would need about 200 acres, would supply its own water and dispose of sewage in its own plant and would be connected with major highways by access roads constructed as part of the dispersal plan.

Animated Shop Windows Lure Children—and Adults

Disney Characters, Big Train Display Prove Fascinating

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

The kids are having a grand old time in front of Washington department store windows—that is, whenever they can shove the grown-ups out of the way.

With such items as animated Walt Disney characters and Mother Goose rhymes, not to mention a live Santa Claus popping out of a chimney, the store windows are a festival of enchantment for the children during the Christmas season.

The giant-size Walt Disney characters doing their animated stuff are featured in five windows at the Hecht Co., 7th and F sts. nw.

The Western motif is used for this Christmas roundup, starring such popular folk as Pluto, Donald Duck, Bongo, Minnie Ha-Ha, Jose Carioca, Dopey, the Big Bad Wolf, the Medium-Sized Bad Wolf and the Little Bad Wolf.

In the windows of Woodward & Lothrop's North Building, at 10th and G sts. nw., there is more delight for the small folk.

In a lavish display are six windows telling in animation the stories of the Three Bears, the Cow Who Jumped Over the Moon, Little Miss Muffet, Humpty Dumpty, Red Riding Hood and Jack Sprat. Through loudspeakers comes the story of Santa Claus making a visit to Washington.

Lansburgh & Bro., on 7th between D and E sts. nw., has a train display in its corner window that will knock your eyes out, no matter what your age.

As realistic as the Chief roaring East, it includes train bells ringing, whistles blowing, puffing and chuffing — coming through loudspeakers. We counted three trains under way at one time.

Kann's, at 8th st. and Market sp. nw., shows Santa doing his beloved chores in two corner windows.

In one window a live Santa emerges from a chimney and through a loudspeaker talks to the children. Then he is shown disappearing and emerging through a fireplace in another window. This show goes on at 10 and 11 a. m. and at 1:30, 2:30, 3:30 and 4:30 p. m. daily and at 2:30 and 3:30 p. m. Sundays.

Julius Garfinckel & Co., at 14th and F sts. nw., is also giving its windows a special Christmas touch.

Christmas motif, used as a background, consists of twig roping flecked with green and diamond dust, and with small white starlights.

Counties to Ask Greater Voice In Area Planning

Would Revise Bill To Take in More Territory, Enlarge Board Membership

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

The newly formed Washington Regional Planning Council will ask Congress to make important changes in the proposed legislation to expand the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Frederick Gutheim, chairman of the new group and a member of the Upper Montgomery County Planning Commission, said yesterday the regional group's executive committee is agreed on two points and expects to testify at the Capitol that:

1. The present Senate-approved bill does not include in the commission's jurisdiction enough territory in Maryland and Virginia, now that the Government has proposed to disperse agencies far into the countryside.

2. The bill does not provide for sufficient representation on the commission of planning bodies in the surrounding areas.

Authority Over D. C., Environs

Gutheim noted that the Senate version would make the national planning body "the central planning and coordinating agency" for the orderly development of the National Capital and its environs with "environs" defined as Montgomery, Prince Georges, Arlington and Fairfax counties. The bill also gives the commission authority over Federal developments (but not private plans) in any other area within 50 miles of the District.

Gutheim said that the dispersal program will bring Prince William and Loudoun counties in Virginia and Charles and St. Marys counties in Maryland into the Washington picture. He said the St. Marys Planning Commission already has applied for admission to the Washington Regional Planning Council. There is no planning body in Charles County, he added.

Part of Frederick County, Md., also may turn out to be a Washington "suburb" under the dispersal plan. Although Howard and Anne Arundel are closer to the District than some of the other areas, they also are too close to Baltimore to become dispersal sites.

On the second point, that of commission membership, the Senate version calls for 15—seven Government officials, five "eminent citizens," at least one of whom is a District resident, and three more "eminent citizens," one each from Maryland, Virginia and the District. The present membership is 10—six Government officials and four "eminent citizens."

Would Add 5 Members

The District has suggested that, instead of three more, only one of whom would be from the city, there be added five more "eminent citizens" three of them from the District. The District also has objected to giving the national body control over District building plans, something it does not now have.

The Arlington Planning Commission has suggested to the regional body (which includes all the planning units in the immediate area, including the national body) that there be one member on the new national group from each local body.

This, in effect, would tend to give the dominant vote to the suburban area. There appears to be a feeling that just that should be done, since the big planning job concerns the suburbs. Actually, this proposal would appear to give the balance of power to the various Federal representatives. General Services, for example, will control the handling of the dispersal program, if Congress votes it.

Wrong Attends

Cathedral Gets Window For Canada

A window in honor of Canada was dedicated at the Washington Cathedral yesterday.

Located in the west wall of the north transept, the window is the last of three representing "Good Neighbor Relationship Among Nations." Other windows previously dedicated in the north transept are in honor of England and South America.

The Very Rev. John W. Suter, Dean of the Cathedral, officiated at the ceremony.

The honored guest among the 2000 present was Hume Wrong, Ambassador from Canada. In his address the Ambassador said:

"It is appropriate that a Canada Window should be included in the design" of the Cathedral. "Nowhere in the world," he continued, "has the practice of international good neighborhood been more extensively applied than in the relations between our two countries."

In the procession through the Great Choir of the Cathedral were the flags of the 48 States and the District of Columbia, United States, Canada, the United Nations and the British Commonwealth. Following were the special guests, the clergy, Dean Suter, and the Ambassador.

Among the special guests were: Norman J. O. Makin, Australian Ambassador; C. E. Steel, Minister from Great Britain; G. C. F. Corea, Ambassador from Ceylon; F. H. Corner, First Secretary from New Zealand; A. B. Bhadkamkar, Second Secretary from India; W. Dirkse-Van-Schalkwyk, First Secretary from the Union of South Africa; M. O. A. Baig, Minister from Pakistan.

The Canada window, funds for which came from an anonymous donor, stands between England's and South America's windows.

Dean Suter dedicated the window in the memory of George C. F. Bratenahl, dean of the cathedral from 1915 to 1936. Music for the service was provided by the cathedral choir and the United States Navy Band under the direction of Lieut. Comdr. Charles Brendler.

For Jet Safety

Obsolete Plane Aids Light Tests

"Adaptable Annie," an obsolete Boeing plane, is being used in lighting tests which may result in fewer plane crashes.

The Civil Aeronautics Administration announced yesterday that "Annie" and several other planes are now testers for providing advance warning lights for jets approaching each other at 500-mile-an-hour speeds.

Rigged up like a Christmas tree, "Adaptable Annie" now carries five tail-lights with red, yellow, lunar white and six fuselage lights. Three sweep-beam high-intensity lights, similar to the type used on fire engines, are mounted on the leading edges of the wing tips and on the tail of the fuselage.

The high-intensity beams are visible at 20 to 30 miles distance—equivalent to more than one minute between the time the plane spots light and directly approaches the other aircraft. CAA considers this a minimum safe warning for planes closing in at 500 miles an hour.

In the continuing program of "effective aircraft lighting" tests, conducted at the Indianapolis Technical Development and Evaluation Center, many improvements have been noted.

Protestant Groups Plan Unification

By Tom Schlesinger
Post Reporter

CLEVELAND, Nov. 26. — The 42-year-old Federal Council of Churches -- Protestantism's best known cooperative agency—bows out of existence Monday.

It is the most familiar of eight interdenominational, national joint agencies which will dissolve and merge here this week into the widely heralded National Council of Churches of Christ.

More than 400 delegates are expected to break through the effects of northern Ohio's worst blizzard in modern times to attend the final session of the council.

Noted chiefly for its work in evangelistic and social service fields, the Federal Council has been in hot water on more than one occasion for its "liberal" views. It exercised no control over the utterances of those elected to membership. Delegates were responsible to the communions which named them.

To Become a Division

The Federal Council is scheduled to become the division of Christian Life and Work in the National Council.

One of the highlights of the group's final gathering will be the report of the Commission of Christian Scholars on the moral principles involved in obliteration bombing and the military use of the hydrogen bomb for mass destruction.

The Right Rev. Angus Dun, Episcopal Bishop of Washington, who headed the group, will give its findings Monday afternoon.

The report is a product of the commission appointed last spring by the Federal Council. Among its members are Chester I. Barnard, president of the Rockefeller Foundation; William Waymack, a former member of the Atomic Energy Commission; Dr. Arthur H. Compton, physicist and president of Washington University, St. Louis, and the Rev. Alfred T. Mollegen of the Episcopal Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

42-Year Review

Another feature will be a fellowship dinner Monday night when members will review the years, 1908-50, and the contributions of the Federal Council.

At the dinner, there will be a presentation of a testimonial to John Foster Dulles in recognition of his services to the church in international affairs.

The other agencies which will merge into the National Council, in the order they began their cooperative work, are the International Council of Religious Education (1872); the Foreign Missions Conference of North America (1893); the Missionary Education Movements of the United States and Canada (1902); the Home Missions Council of North America (1908); the Protestant Council of Higher Education 1911); the United Stewardship Council (1920), and the United Council of Church Women (1541).

To Complete Plans

Another 1000 delegates are expected at the final meetings of these agencies. The sessions will be devoted to the completion of plans for dissolution as separate organizations and the turning over of functions and programs to divisions, departments and commissions in the National Council Main focus of the week will be centered in the establishment of the National Council by 25 Protestant and four Eastern Orthodox communions. The convention opens Tuesday and will be attended by churchmen and laymen from 48 States, Alaska and Hawaii. More than 100 delegates are expected from Washington.

Dr. Earl Frederick Adams of New York, executive chairman of the National Council's planning committee, said that the blizzard could cut convention attendance from an anticipated 7000 to as small as 2000.

Adams said most of the official delegates were coming by train. Others planning to motor or fly in will probably change their minds, he added. The new council's records are stalled in cars scattered between New York and Cleveland, he said.

Two Named from D. C.

Dr. Adams announced the appointment of two Washingtonians to the general board which will serve as the council's executive committee between biennial meetings.

They are Miss Nannie H. Burroughs, Lincoln Heights, Washington, of the National Baptist Convention, and the Rev. W. H. Jernagin, pastor of Mount Carmel Baptist Church.

The 29 churches, which will be represented by 600 official delegates, will enter the new organization with a charter signing Wednesday in Cleveland's Public Auditorium. Delegates will represent a combined church membership of approximately 32,000,000.

Convention officials said no formal decision would be made as to the council's national headquarters at this meeting.

One of the features of the constituting convention will be public meetings Wednesday and Thursday nights. On Wednesday night, Secretary of State Dean Acheson will speak on the convention theme: "This Nation Under God." The Rev. Edward H. Pruden, president of the American Baptist Convention and pastor of First Baptist Church, Washington, will preside.

St. Patrick's Sons Celebrate

By Elizabeth Maguire

Two friendly sons of Saint Patrick were principal figures at a cocktail party held yesterday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris. The Ambassador of Ireland, John Joseph Hearne, honorary member of the Friendly Sons, of which Mr. Morris is president, shared honors with Mrs. Hearne at the 6 to 8 gathering.

Just about every group in Washington was represented at the party, from White House aides and Cabinet members to chiefs of missions and native Washingtonians.

Mrs. Morris, in a gown of black lace with a spray of orchids at the shoulder, received her guests in the early French hallway. At the end of the hallway and down a few steps into the sixteenth century drawing room, guests were again received by Mr. Morris, the Ambassador, and Mrs. Hearne. Mrs. Hearne, too, wore black with orchids.

GUESTS for the most part gathered upstairs in the ballroom where a long buffet was spread with turkeys, Virginia baked hams, salads, various cakes, coffee and tea. In the candlelit room hundreds lingered to chat and mill about, looking for old friends and new faces.

The clergy was represented by Dr. Leslie Glenn, Father Joseph Francis Thorning, and others. In the diplomatic group were the Ambassador of Peru, Don Fernando Berckemeyer; the Ambassador of Honduras and Senora de Valle, the Charge d'Affaires of Spain and Senora de Propper de Callejon, the Ambassador of Ceylon and Mme. Corea, the Ambassador of Italy and Signora Tarchiani, the Ambassador of the Philippines, Joseph Elizalde; the Minister of Finland and Mme. Jutila, the wife of the Chinese Ambassador, Mme. Koo, and the Agricultural Attache of Spain and Senora de Echegaray.

Miss Bertha Joseph introduced her "aide," Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan, who attended with Mrs. Vaughan. Representative Dewey Short was there, confident of the power and influence that the Republicans would assert in the next Congress. Former Senator Burton K. Wheeler and Assistant to the President and Mrs. John Steelman were also guests at the party.

Miss Rose Saul, Mr. and Mrs. James Cromwell were there; also Julio Heurtematte, Associate Justice and Mrs. Harold Burton, Col. and Mrs. Jess Bryan Bennett, Judge and Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin, Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred D. Whittemore, Miss Jane Lingo, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph McGarraghy, Rear Admiral and Mrs. William Oscar Spears.

Now Junior Can Learn to Be an Atomic Physicist

By Alleis C. Wilson

TOY DEPARTMENTS this year hold a supply of toys that are more than mere entertainment for youngsters. They are the means of teaching arts and skills and even sciences.

Foremost among these is an atomic energy laboratory for young nuclear physicists. This is the big brother of the chemistry sets manufactured by the A. C. Gilbert Co. The lab includes a Geiger counter, a cloud chamber, electroscope, spinthariscope, Alpha, Beta and Gamma radiation sources, plus Uranium-bearing ores. This is not a gift to be given lightly but it would give a junior scientist a working knowledge of atomic energy. The set is guaranteed harmless. It includes full instructions on using atomic energy for constructive purposes. (Gilbert Hall of Science—$42.50).

A sturdy wooden loom is more tool than toy. This loom will turn out woven pot holders, children's belts and scarfs, shawls, handbags, etc., in many attractive patterns. Weavers from 7 years up will enjoy actually making something.

A HOBBY OF PHOTOGRAPHY could be encouraged with a set of equipment for making prints. All the essentials for printing negatives is included—photo paper, glass printing frame and fixing solution. The negatives can be exposed by sunlight or by an electric bulb. Seventeen negatives are included in the set but your own can be used, too. (F. A. O. Schwarz—$3.).

Knitting spools are an old favorite. The braid-like "knitting" worked on the spools can be fashioned into coin purses, small mats and rugs. (Kann's—49c).

"ATOMIC PHYSICIST"—Junior Grade

For the smaller fry, who are not ready for such ambitious work play, a Bolt-It set would teach something easier. This is a group of blocks to be fastened together with standard size nuts and bolts. A book of instructions shows how to make animals, vehicles and buildings. The nuts and bolts which are almost certain to stray can be replaced at a hardware store. (Play Center, Inc.—$2.).

IF YOU KNOW a little girl who likes tiny replicas, a perfect gift would be a basket full of tiny Mexican baskets. The "big" basket that holds the small ones is only about 4 inches across, so you know how tiny the miniatures are. They include samples of nearly every kind of basket woven by Mexican women. Hours can be spent taking them out, examining them and replacing them. For this reason, they also make excellent gifts for convalescent children who must be kept very quiet. (The Mexican Shop—$1.50).

Younk Izaak Waltons will need some fishing to tide them over until next summer. A waterless fishing pond can be made in any living room or playroom with a magnetic play pond. The set contains four inflated plastic fish with metal mouths and a fishing pole with a magnet for bait. The child only has to drop his line over the arm of any chair and start pulling 'em in. To make it all very legal, a fishing license and a game warden's badge are enclosed with each set. (Woolworth's—69c).

EARLY SHOPPING for items to fill Christmas stockings will pay off big dividends when the real holiday rush begins. And if you don't have the stocking to fill yet, you can order a roomy, bright red one to hang on the mantle Christmas Eve. These are embroidered with the child's name and require two to three weeks for delivery. (The Hecht Co.—$1.25).

Young firefighters on your Christmas list will like a fairly complete fire department. A set of plastic vehicles include a hook and ladder truck, a fire chief's car and a police chief's car plus a garage. (The Hecht Co.—$2.)

IF YOU ARE GROWING a little weary of cowboys, junior grade, it may be just the time to introduce a new character into your child's play. A hardy frontiersman like Daniel Boone would be an excellent model for hours of trail-blazing or Indian-scouting. And part of the equipment for this game is a coonskin cap. An up-to-date version of this headgear has a quilted lining and turn-down ear flaps. (Lansburgh's—$2.99).

If you have ever noticed the interest of children in bus or streetcar operations, you will understand the popularity of a coin changer. It looks just like the ones the drivers use and the toy ones slip easily over the child's belt. A three-coin size holds pennies, dimes and nickels. (Play Center, Inc.—$1.)

Recipes for Enchiladas Have as Much Variety as Do Their Respective Cooks

DEAR ANNE:

On rather shaky footing, I'd like to take issue with you over the recipe you gave in the Monday (20th) issue on enchiladas. It seems every section has its own recipe for certain food. Where I came from, San Angelo, Texas, that is, we would be more inclined to call the "enchiladas" per your recipe "tacos." Another variance is that there should be meat added. I always order Mexican food with an open mind since a certain dish is cooked so many different ways. However, the chief distinction, I have always understood, is that tacos have lettuce or other green stuff and "enchiladas" do not.

Here's a recipe for enchiladas as I cook them.

ENCHILADAS

1 pound ground round steak
1 ounce Gebhart chili powder
3 cloves chopped garlic
3 chopped onions
2 small cans tomato sauce, plus equal amount of water
½ pound grated cheese
Salt and pepper to taste

TORTILLAS

Place meat, salt, pepper, chili powder, all the garlic and about 2/3 of the onion in a skillet or pan and brown the meat. If fat is necessary, it may be added. When the meat has browned, pour in tomato sauce and water. Let this mixture simmer until it has cooked down. This takes 30 to 45 minutes. When meat mixture has cooked down, take tortillas and fry one at a time in hot grease. Place tortillas flat on large flat pan (i. e., baking dish or toast tray) and place meat mixture across center. Roll and arrange in dish. Sprinkle additional meat mixture, grated cheese and remaining chopped onions over top. Place the rolled enchiladas in a hot oven long enough to melt the cheese and serve hot. This makes 6 to 8 enchiladas.

The Gebhart chili people in San Antonio, Texas, put out a recipe book full of Mexican dishes. Incidentally, their recipe for enchiladas differs from both yours and mine!

Ruth Adds Two Exercises To 15-Minute-a-Day Program

(Fourth day of Ruth's beauty program)

By Ann Lawrence

AS SO MANY WOMEN DO, Ruth noticed after the birth of her two children that her breasts were starting to sag and droop. She had nursed both children and the unaccustomed weight of the breasts seemed to be breaking down the delicate tissues.

We explained to her that breasts themselves contain no muscles, only glands and tissues. Therefore, any exercises to firm the bosom must work on the surrounding, supporting muscles.

These are the vertical muscles, running from the collarbone to the breast, and the horizontal ones, just under the breast which stretch around the rib cage.

Here are four simple exercises Ruth learned to firm her bosom, develop the chest muscles and, at the same time, build up the bosom.

1. Hold your arms out in front, on shoulder level, elbows bent. Press closed fist of one hand into palm of hand, as hard as possible. Count 60 with each fist.

2. Hold your arms out in front on shoulder level. Push fingertips firmly together as hard as possible. Count 60.

3. Hold your arms straight out at sides, at shoulder level. Rotate in small circles from shoulder, elbows straight, first toward front, then toward back. Count 20 in each direction.

4. Hold the "lithe-line" straight out in front. Stretch arms out toward back as far as possible. Count to four. These exercises should all be done while sitting, according to Diane, the Helena Rubinstein instructor from whom Ruth learned the series.

ONE MORE EXERCISE—a midriff reducer—completed Ruth's course. Ruth lies on her back, while Diane adjusts the loops of the lith-line over her feet. Then she props up on her shoulders and stretches the left leg down towards the floor, as far back over her head as she can make it go. Then she repeats with the right leg, scissors-fashion, and works up gradually to 12 times with each leg.

For the past three days, you have learned a series of exercises for hips, thighs, waist, posture and bosom. Ruth took careful notes on all of them, but knew that she would never try them all, every day. The first week of our experiment, she did stick to them faithfully, but by the second, she had "edited" them down to one for her waist, two for her bosom, one for posture, one for hips and one for thighs.

This is perfectly good procedure, provided she—and you—don't skip the daily dose. Fifteen minutes a day, with the exercises you like best, will do the trick.

N. Y. Probes Firm Headed by McNutt

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (U.P.).—Attorney General Nathaniel L. Goldstein disclosed today that he has launched an investigation of the sale of stock by a uranium prospecting company headed by Paul V. McNutt, former Democratic Governor of Indiana.

Goldstein said the stock was being offered by the American-Canadian Uranium Co., Ltd. only as a "speculation" and that the company made no claim that ore had been developed or discovered on the company's land in Saskatchewan, Canada.

"It is contrary to my usual practice to make known an investigation in its early stages, but this situation is unusual and calls for public scrutiny," Goldstein said.

Goldstein charged that two of the "promoters" of the new company, Maurice Young and Joseph H. Hirshhorn, had been convicted in Canada for violating stock regulations. He said Young had a record of conviction and jail sentence for fraud and conspiracy in connection with stock manipulation and that Hirshhorn had a record of two convictions for violating the foreign exchange laws of Canada.

McNutt, former High Commissioner of the Philippines and former head of the War Manpower Commission, said in Indianapolis that Young's conviction occurred "about 20 years ago" and that since then he has had a good record and was given a Legion of Merit Medal by the United States for his work during World War II. He said he was unaware that Hirshhorn had been convicted in Canada.

McNutt told the United Press the Securities Exchange Commission already had approved the stock issue. He said insiders had already put up about $200,000, and that "we believe uranium is there" on the company's lands in Canada.

"I think that (Saskatchewan) is the only place where uranium will be found on the continent," he said.

Goldstein charged that the public was being invited to put up $1,750,000 but would get "at best" only a 17 percent interest in the company while insiders who put up $90,098 will controll at least 83 percent of the stock.

"If an important strike were made," Goldstein said, "the insiders could cream off 83 percent while the public was getting 17 percent toward the repayment of its investment. It is certainly a speculation—on the public's part only."

Goldstein said the company had gone ahead and advertised the stock issued, despite his warning that he was investigating it. He said his investigation was being made under the State Martin Act or "Blue Sky Law."

In addition to McNutt as president, the company has Josiah Marvel, jr., former United States Ambassador to Denmark, as vice president.

Artie Shaw Heard With Symphony

By Paul Hume

Two orchestras played yesterday among the other Sunday concerts.

The National Symphony opened its afternoon series, with Artie Shaw to bear out its intention of making this a popular half-dozen programs. In the evening, the Agriculture Symphony opened a new season before one of its largest audiences.

Howard Mitchell and Artie Shaw made some fine music in the afternoon. Shaw likes the idea of playing "straight," or "long-haired," or whatever kind of music you call the music you mean when you don't mean "popular" music. (Boy, that's silly line-drawing. Aren't Beethoven and Tschaikowsky popular?)

Oh well, you know what I mean. Shaw really unbent in the second half of the concert when he gave out his arrangement of three popular songs: "Frenesi," "Star Dust" and "Begin the Beguine."

In these he could pull up his clarinet, stretch his elbows, and let the tone land wherever it wanted to. And it blew sweet and hot, depending on the mood. For encores, he added Ravel's Habanera piece, then a low down, soothin' blues, and finally a pip of a frothy waltz by Poulenc.

In his more serious moment of the day, Norman Dello Joio's Concertante for clarinet and orchestra, things were different. Dello Joio wrote the piece for Shaw. It is a very good piece, and one other clarinets ought to play, if Shaw is not holding sole performance rights.

While Dello Joio is perfectly comfortable in writing jazz, he does not do so except when out and out jazz is what he wants. He makes the most of Shaw's gifts for high notes, sweet phrasing, and general style. The orchestral background is skillfully designed to give the soloist the breaks. That is no small feat in writing for a solo instrument of limited volume.

Around the afternoon's famous soloist, Mitchell placed the Kindley arrangement of Handel's D Minor Prelude and Fugue, and Chabrier's scintillant Spanish rhapsody, Espana. The orchestra played in its best form, closing with Ferde Grofe's Grand Canyon Suite.

Frederick Fall set his Agriculture orchestra a series of tough tests in their first program. Three pieces filled the evening. Handel's Royal Fireworks Suite and Britten's Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra came first. Post-intermission time went to Dvorak's fifth symphony.

The Handel was an unusually hard choice for the orchestra, comparatively, since both the National and Boston orchestras have played it here this fall. It may be safely said, however, that Fall gave the overture of the suite a far more Handelian flavor in his tempo than Munch did with the Bostonians.

The orchestra's strings have improved notably in tone, and the woodwinds sounded well as a group.

Britten's music, in the variations and a fugue on a theme of Purcell, is particularly hard on an orchestra. It exposes each choir of the symphony, one at a time, demanding virtuoso solo work from every player.

Sylvia Meyer, harpist of the National Symphony, assisted to perfection, and Jacques Ringler read the script provided for the film sound track intended to go with the music.

Flophouse Yielded 105 Voters, Senate Probers Discover

Senate investigators have "verified" that a Philadelphia "flophouse" housing three persons produced 105 registered voters in the recent election, Sen. Guy M. Gillette (D., Ia.) reported yesterday.

He said the Senate campaign investigating subcommittee, of which he is chairman, has uncovered enough evidence of election fraud in Philadelphia and Luzerne County, Pa., to require public hearings.

He will ask the subcommittee at its meeting next Wednesday to authorize on-the-spot hearings to air facts turned up by the group's investigators, he said. Gillette was interviewed on Columbia Broadcasting System's "Capitol Cloakroom" television program.

Texan Repeats Surplus Buy; Can't Unload

By The Associated Press

The lucky Texan who paid $6.89 for some surplus Air Force equipment and then sold it to Air Force officers for $63,000 has found some more at bargain prices, it was reported yesterday.

Two different sources said the canny Texan acquired the same type of instruments but the Air Force refused to buy them back this time.

The name of the Texan has been withheld from the public by both the Senate Armed Services Preparedness Subcommittee and Air Force officers.

Pentagon spokesmen for the Air Force refused to answer any questions, saying that all information had been supplied to the Senate group which is acting as a "watchdog committee" over the multibillion dollar defense program and Korean war.

Senator Lyndon Johnson (D., Tex.), chairman of the investigating group who first called attention to the "most astounding case of short-sightedness," was out of the city.

Referred to Air Force

Aides of the Senator said any questions about additional lots of the surplus equipment could be answered by the Air Force officers.

Johnson, when he first called attention to the transaction, said he was not making the name of the Texan public because he had cooperated with the subcommittee and its investigators and double-checks had verified the unusual story.

The east Texan said he thought he was buying some small cardboard computers in 1946 when he bid less than 5 cents apiece for the surplus offered for sale at San Antonio.

Later he discovered he had bought "168 serviceable unused aircraft parallax computers" valued at $7200 each, or worth $1,209,600. These are electric gun fire-control instruments for airplanes.

$350 For 5 Cents

The Texan got back more than $350 for each 5 cents on his original purchase. Reports here were that he then went out and found some more of these computers, bought them for about $30 each but has failed to sell the second set back to the Air Force.

Air Force spokesmen said they could not answer questions as to why they did not repurchase the second set, what had been done to officers involved in these sales, or any other questions about the incident.

Elsewhere a reporter was told that originally the Air Force declared the World War II computers surplus because a new fire control instrument had been designed and was being produced. Later, it was said, these failed to prove as good as the first models and so the surplus was repurchased.

Maybank Asks Easing of Car Credit Terms

Senator Burnet R. Maybank (D., S. C.) yesterday proposed the issuance of Government "certificates of necessity" entitling some purchasers of lower-priced automobiles to more liberal installment-buying terms.

Maybank said he will ask the Federal Reserve Board to consider the idea in studying the complaints of car dealers and others against the credit restrictions now in effect. These require a down payment of one-third, with no more than 15 months to clear up the balance.

"It's apparent," Maybank declared, "that those terms are causing a lot of hardship among lower-income workers who need cars to get back and forth to their jobs."

The South Carolina Senator is in line to be chairman of a new Senate-House "watchdog" committee which will start hearings probably Wednesday or Thursday on automobile credit controls. Maybank also heads the Senate Banking Committee, which helped draft the law giving the Federal Reserve Board discretion to invoke installment buying curbs on a variety of products.

After enactment of the law last September, the board issued an order fixing one-third down and 21 months as the maximum period for paying the balance on cars. A few months later the board decided the terms were not tight enough and set the new ones.

Dealers have contended they are being forced out of business. Would-be purchasers said they could not afford the required monthly payments.

"What I have in mind generally," Mayband said, "is that the board could set up standards qualifying certain persons for more liberal credit terms. Possibly 18 months or even longer in some cases could be substituted for the present 15 months to pay up the balance.

"I would limit the program to the lower-priced cars and to purchasers with low or moderate incomes. Those who can afford the higher priced cars don't need any special consideration.

"The purchaser also would be required to show that a car is essential in his work."

Ewing Charges Soviet Erases Jewish Life

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (AP).—Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing today accused Russia of ruthlessly erasing all phases of Jewish life in the Soviet Union while maintaining diplomatic relations with Israel.

Ewing told 5000 delegates of the twenty-seventh annual national convention of the National Committee for Labor Israel that "for the past year or more, there have been constant reports of a gradual extermination of the spiritual, cultural and religious life of Russian Jewry."

Arlington Blaze Routs 15; Smoke Fells Fireman

An Arlington fireman was overcome by smoke, and 15 persons, most of them in their nightclothes, were driven into the cold yesterday by a two-alarm fire in the home of William Mullins at 2016 S. Kenmore st. Arlington.

Overcome by smoke while fighting the second-floor blaze, Woodrow Griffin, attached to No. 1 engine company, was carried to safety by his captain, Leon Dodson, and treated at Arlington Hospital.

Firemen said the blaze started in the bedroom of Mullins' brother, George, and was confined to the upper floor of the two-story frame house.

Rooms Without Walls in Video

By Wayne Oliver

NEW YORK, NOV. 26 (AP).—Rooms without walls are Sam Leve's answer to the high cost of scenery for television.

Leve, scenic designer for "Airflyte Theater" on CBS video Thursday nights, accomplishes it this way:

If a scene calls for bookcases, a window and perhaps a door, Leve has these props moved into place. The window frame is suspended by wires that are invisible to the camera. Pictures are hung in the same manner.

Behind them Leve has a cyclorama—a taut cloth suspended from an overhead trolley track that encircles the studio.

The camera sees in only two dimensions and the pros appear to be in the same plane as the cyclorama, which serves as the wall although it may be several feet to the rear. If the cyclorama is lighted, you see a light wall—or at least think you see one. If it is unlighted, you get the impression of a dark wall.

Besides saving the expense of actual walls that would have to be built, painted and moved into place, the cyclorama plan has another big advantage. The camera can shoot into the room from any angle—right through what would be a a wall on a conventional set.

"Solidly built walls and well painted and well pasted wall paper do not add to the effect," he observes. He points out that the absence of a lot of fine detail actually aids in focusing attention on the players and the action.

While not the only one using the cyclorama now, Leve was a pioneer in its development for video use and would like to go much further.

He proposes additional overhead trolley tracks and switches laid out so the designer could move the suspended background cloth to any point in the studio in a matter of seconds. It also proposes a semi-permanent setup of lights so that from a switching panel you could get lights from practically any direction trained on any point in the studio. This, he estimates, would make it possible to do the lighting for a set in 10 minutes instead of taking up to 36 hours as at present.

"The physical costs of production can be cut down enormously," he says.

The switch-track arrangement would have another great advantage, declares Leve. Even though you had your props set up for a particular program, you could still use the studio by switching the cyclorama cloth in front of the props to hide them and provide the background for another program.

EVER BECOME just a little irked at Lawrence Spivak for some of the needling questions he tosses at guests being interviewed on "Meet the Press" on NBC television?

Spivak off the show is as affable a fellow as you'd want to meet, but as a member of the panel of journalists he has the responsibility of keeping the interview moving at a fast and interesting pace. And if his persistent or provocative questioning sometimes puts him in an unsympathetic role from the viewer standpoint, it makes for a livelier show and sometimes brings responses that are headline news.

"Incidentally, our visitors are not at a disadvantage, as it might sometimes appear," says Spivak who owns the show jointly with Martha Roundtree. "These men are trained in holding press conferences, accustomed to curiosity and criticism, and certainly should be better informed about their subjects than those conducting the interview."

Mrs. Nicholas E. Devereaux of 811 S. Columbus st., Alexandria, Va. (she was Sheila Ryan when I worked with her at WINX), passes along a fetching little item about the newsboy at 14th and K sts. nw.

Crying his wares the other day, he shouted: "Read all about it — Man Stabs Wife With Ice Pick. She should have bought an electric icebox. Read all about it."

AFTERMATH

The Commerce Department estimates that we'll buy each other 14 billion dollars worth of Christmas presents this year.

My own personal guess is that 10 billion of it will be given to chlidren, and that their mothers will subsequently have to remind the kids 20 billion times to write thank-you notes to the donors.

MAIL BAG

Dear Bill:

Your news columns state that businessmen conferring here on urban problems are trying to figure out methods for providing off-street parking facilities.

Practically all of these men come from cities which have parking meters, and the meters yield a great deal of revenue.

A very simple course is therefore open. As soon as the meters have paid for themselves, additional profits should be accumulated until they are sufficient to buy or lease a plot of land which can be used as a parking lot. Continued meter revenues, plus profits from the first lot, can be accumulated until there is enough in the kitty to obtain a second lot. And the process can be repeated until enough lots and garages have been provided to give each community an adequate amount of off-street parking space.

To begin with, what's wrong with using this technique right here in Washington?

W. M. O'C.

Dear Sir:

Some cities have followed a plan of this sort, but our District Commissioners have decided that they are against putting the District of Columbia into the parking lot business, in competition with private interests.

There's a feeling in many quarters here that any such Municipal intervention in Washington would result in a roar of protest from Congressmen who believe that we already have too much Government interference with private enterprise.

In some instances, of course, National, State and Municipal legislatures have taken the opposite view, and have voted in favor of public participation in many fields —electric power, roads, schools, bridges, waterworks, recreational facilities and many others. Even today, the Congress itself maintains a well-equipped stationery store in which legislators (and members of the press galleries) may buy fountain pens, fine leather brief cases, and all sorts of office supplies —and at substantial discounts. This is certainly in direct competition with private enterprise.

But these decisions are made by our chosen (appointed, here in the District) representatives, and those who disagree may take comfort from this thought: In the long run, public policy is determined by public opinion. If enough people share your view, it will eventually win out. If the majority prefers otherwise, you'll be left free to agitate for change to your heart's content.

Meantime, our local parking meter revenues go into the Highway Fund, which maintains, among other things, the Motor Vehicle Parking Agency. The function of this group is to try to interest private capital in providing needed facilities, and some progress along these lines has already been made. Some, but not enough. Bill

STREET SCENE

Our reporter for this one is R. L. Newton:

It was around noon, on Thanksgiving. A car drove up to the curb on Columbia rd., across the street from a delicatessen. The driver got out, crossed to the store, and left his wife sitting in the car.

A few minutes later the motorist emerged from the delicatessen, jaywalked right out into traffic, just barely missed being struck by a streetcar, and miraculously completed his journey in one piece. A bystander, who saw the whole episode, sauntered over to the wife's side of the car and solemnly intoned:

"My congratulations, madam. You have just missed, by a hair's breadth, your opportunity to become a widow."

HOW'S THAT AGAIN?

While helping judge a Thanksgiving Day essay contest sponsored by the Greenbelt Co-Operator, I ran across an amusing choice of words in the composition of a young contestant.

In an effort to emphasize the spiritual importance of Thanksgiving, he had written:

"We should be thankful for all kinds of things—material and immaterial."

PIED SIGN DEPT.

Fire Safety on Troop Ships Hit

By Drew Pearson

This column recently revealed that seven troopships, now carrying American troops across the Atlantic and Pacific, are equipped with unsafe lifeboat gear. Further investigation has now uncovered that, in addition to this, the fire-detecting, extinguishing and alarm systems are also below the minimum safety standards set by the United States Coast Guard.

PEARSON

It should be noted that United States Coast Guard standards are high, and many foreign luxury liners do not conform to them. Nevertheless, ships carrying United States troops should.

Furthermore, the steel bulkheads on these troopships are unlined, uninsulated and uncovered, hence a fire hazard in case of overheating; the ventilation system doesn't shut off automatically in case of fire but would continue to fan the flames, and the electrical equipment in the hospital and battery rooms is subject to explosion.

This column has also learned that, in addition to the seven troopships previously named, three others are in the same condition. Meanwhile, it remains a fact that illegal, Russian-type mines are drifting in Far Eastern waters as an added threat to navigation.

The seven troopships named earlier, that do not comply with Coast Guard safety standards are the Gens. W. M. Black, LeRoy Eltings, W. G. Hann, Stuart Heintzelman, W. C. Langfitt, M. B. Stewart and S. D. Sturgis, each with a capacity of 4000 troops.

In addition, three larger troopships are in the same condition: the Gens. John Pope, William Weigel and M. C. Meigs. (Each of these is capable of carrying 6000 troops.) All 10 ships are now hauling GIs to Korea and Germany, and bringing dependents back to this country.

Navy Promises Changes

Following this column's investigation, the Navy has promised to bring the 10 troopships up to standard as soon as practical. Already a plan has been tentatively approved to equip the lifeboat gear with auxiliary, diesel generators to swing the davits into position for lowering lifeboats. With the present equipment, it takes the ship's power from the engine room to swing the davits out in safe time. However, this central power in the engineroom frequently fails in case of a bad hit by a mine or submarine.

A Navy spokesman, interviewed on these deficiencies, claims they are not as serious as they sound. He pointed out that as long as the ships are crammed with troops, the GI's can detect a fire and spread the alarm without an approved Coast Guard detection and alarm system. He also stated that Coast Guard standards are unusually high, so that even foreign luxury liners cannot pass their inspection.

Taft Doesn't Smile

A kidding remark by Secretary of State Dean Acheson taken out of context has pitched him into a head-on collision with Senator Robert Taft and the McCarthyites again.

A few days after Senator Taft told reporters he was not an isolationist, but wanted to "re-examine" our foreign policy, Acheson was speaking off the cuff to the National Council of Negro Women and said: "I read in the papers there is a species of homo sapiens which has recently become extinct. That is the isolationist. We are told it's very rude to refer to anybody as an isolationist and its hurts their feelings. But a new species, the re-examinist, has come on the horizon. I was very much puzzled when I heard about this new species.

"It's possible that a re-examinist might be a farmer who goes out every morning and pulls up his crops to see how they are doing. Or it might be this re-examinist comes down to breakfast in the morning and looks at his wife and says, 'Do I really love that woman? How did I ever turn up here with her?' When we re-examine, does it mean we are like the sound navigator who on a long flight or voyage checks his course by the sun and stars every day? Or does it mean the navigator says, 'How did I ever get started on this trip?'

"If to re-examine means going before Congress and explaining every single item of every policy and every program, we all belong to that school, and we all re-examine our progress. We all find out our failure, look at what new actions we should take, and justify what we have been doing."

Senator Taft, who usually has a keen sense of humor, in this case has hit the ceiling. He just doesn't see anything funny about it. Though the rest of Washington is laughing, it may not laugh in the long run; for this new feud between the State Department and GOP Senate leaders may further delay getting back on a stable bipartisan foreign policy.
